Somebody on medium had a very interesting take on this question. They weren't being fully serious, but the take was interesting nonetheless. The article was called "How to Be Polite":

> Here's a polite person's trick, one that has never failed me. I will share it with you because I like and respect you, and it is clear to me that you'll know how to apply it wisely: When you are at a party and are thrust into conversation with someone, see how long you can hold off before talking about what they do for a living. And when that painful lull arrives, be the master of it. I have come to revel in that agonizing first pause, because I know that I can push a conversation through. Just ask the other person what they do, and right after they tell you, say: "Wow. That sounds hard."
> Because nearly everyone in the world believes their job to be difficult. I once went to a party and met a very beautiful woman whose job was to help celebrities wear Harry Winston jewelry. I could tell that she was disappointed to be introduced to this rumpled giant in an off-brand shirt, but when I told her that her job sounded difficult to me she brightened and spoke for 30 straight minutes about sapphires and Jessica Simpson. She kept touching me as she talked. I forgave her for that. I didn't reveal a single detail about myself, including my name. Eventually someone pulled me back into the party. The celebrity jewelry coordinator smiled and grabbed my hand and said, “I like you!” She seemed so relieved to have unburdened herself. I counted it as a great accomplishment. Maybe a hundred times since I’ve said, “wow, that sounds hard” to a stranger, always to great effect. I stay home with my kids and have no life left to me, so take this party trick, my gift to you.

i know this is subjective, but i say it a lot anyway, because i really believe that writing well for children is harder than writing well for adults. i respect the people who do it so much. there’s something about well-written children’s stories that makes adults go, “oh, this is for me.” like, this is the thing i needed and wanted. where you sort of forget that you aren’t a child or what this story could mean to a child, because it means something to you.

and i think too that there’s a kind of maturity? wisdom? to have that feeling and be able to recognize that it isn’t actually. it’s not for you. it’s still for children. you’re not cracking a secret code where it was for you and not for children. to me, that’s the magic of good children’s stories as an adult reader or watcher — somehow i can access it anyway, not from a distanced impersonal “oh this will be so great for some child out there” perspective, but as if i were a child. it’s a privilege and a grace to sit in that space for a little while.

bryke believed that torturing korra was a necessity for her to learn compassion.

An important thread. An critique of Avatar isn't a personal attack on you, the show isn't perfect, and has some racist aspects.

ellsss Follow

I'm sorry I find this absurd if I'm being honest. I'll explain:

In the fortune teller, Meng does call her a "floozy" and the writers put that in there to show her jealousy and for comedic effect. It wasn't to push an anti native agenda. Also, ember island Katara having a slit in her dress wasn't to sexualise natives as far as I know, it was to make fun of the ideas they originally had for the characters, like ember island toph being a dude resembles how they were originally gonna make Toph a male character. I see the point of people being like "oh so your original idea was a fourteen year old being hypersexualised?" so I'll take that, but I don't think it was anything to do with her being a POC/native.

Regarding the animal pelts I don't have much to say about that only because I don't know the cultural history and I haven't read that comic in particular. As for Hama, she's not villainised because she's native she's villainised because she LITERALLY imprisoned INNOCENT fire nation civilians by blood bending them. Of course, her story of what the fire nation soldiers did to her was awful, however, they didn't make her a villain to paint natives in a bad light, it was to show that sometimes the oppressed can be oppressive (like with Jet).

They did the same with humanising the villains too, like with azula's breakdown, or how Long Feng was power hungry because of how he grew up in poverty. Tbh, they even humanised Jet and Hama by showing us their backstory so we could understand the actions, so that's why I don't necessarily understand that point.

Now, for the point about Bryke making Korra go through PTSD to torture her and make her learn compassion, doesn't make sense to me. And to me it doesn't seem anti native because my interpretation was in ATLA, Aang was learning to take responsibility as the avatar and Korra was learning how to be compassionate. I thought her going through all of that in Book 4 was to show some character development and it worked with her character to me. Since Korra is someone who wants to be strong all the time, it was to show that sometimes it's okay to be vulnerable and that vulnerability can make you strong.

Also, let's not forget she literallly almost died and if it wasn't for Suyin, she would have literally been gone and there would be no more avatar. That's some traumatic shit, I wouldn't be surprised if I went through PTSD after that too 🙈😂😻 It was a humbling experience for her since she's normally a hot headed character who wants to be perceived as strong. From my perspective it wasn't like Bryke were saying "oh, you're a native woman who's confident and strong, let's take you down a peg" like no 💀 it was supposed to be show how she was learning to be more like Aang in my POV.

I haven't read north and south so I can't comment on the next point. 2 of the Korra villains were water tribe and there were 3 minor villains who were water tribe, I see how it looks, I don't know if I can say there was any malicious intent tho, regarding making natives look bad. Only Tarrlok, Amon, Ming Hua and Unalaq died. They were the major water tribe villains tbh. We also had members of the red lotus that were all from different nations who were major villains.

You're right, Kya looks most like Katara, but I do see features of Katara in Bumi since he has her eyes, her smile and her cheekbones, Tenzin has her eyes and her cheekbones too. Despite both of them being fairer skinned. I can see why only Kya would learn the most about water tribe culture since she's a water bender. As for Tenzin, Aang was so excited about him being an air nomad and a part of the air nation. Tenzin wanted to please his dad so much so I see why he's spend most of his time only learning about Air nation culture. As for Bumi, he was a non bender for most of his life, so I understand why he wouldn't learn a lot about either one.

Tenzin's kids look most like Pema tbh, like they look identical to Pema, but they also have some of Tenzins features, to me, it wasn't to remove the water tribe from them, it was that their parents had stronger genetics. Ming Hua and Amon had brutal deaths but so did P'li (a fire bender) and Ghazan (an earth bender). P'li's HEAD EXPLODED BRO😂 you telling me that's not gruesome and brutal?

Also, I'm pretty sure Ghazan burned to death in that Lava pool he made to try and bury Mako and Bolin in. That's also a shockingly brutal death. You know? A lot of water tribe citizens died in the civil war, so I also see how that can look sus to viewers.

I also definitely understand the last point and it does seem strange that none of Tenzin's kids ended up being a water bender. that would have been cool to add an element of Katara's heritage. I see how that looks so I get that point. But as for everything else, it seems strange to me for the reasons I stated. 🤷‍♀️

On this topic tho, I've seen a lot of racism accusations on the character of Guru Pathik. And that's something I do understand, his character is very stereotypical and it isn't played by a south Asian actor so it kinda sucks. But yeah that's all I gotta say lmaooo😂

lilndndemon

So you missed the point entirely. We're not saying "Oh the creators hate Native people and intentionally portray Natives as worse." We're saying that anti Native racism is something that is so ingrained in society that you will unintentionally write it. Katara being drawn in a more sexual way wasn't them intentionally doing it to be racist but they might've done it without thinking about the negative implications of having a Native 14 year old looks that way.

Or having Korra tortured, because torturing Natives is something that happens a lot in media and is a traumatic spot for many Native people. It might not affect you in the same way watching this, but some Natives might have a very bad reaction to seeing that, and again media tends to do this a lot with Native people and Black people, where it treats them like punching bags and inflicts all sorts of pain on them.

I'm not even going to address the Hama thing entirely because I'm so tired of having to explain this to y'all. How Azula gets redemption despite being and Imperialist, or Iroh is IMMEDIATELY redeemed despite his YEARS of colonization. And yet Hama is irredeemable and evil. Jet is killed, it shows that the fire nation villains are given more love this way (also the fact that it seems that villains who are light skinned such as fire nation are given redemption while darker villains like Jet are not).

I don't know if you are Native, but if you aren't then it really isn't your place when Natives say that certain writing is racist towards Natives for you to walk in saying it isn't. You don't consume portrayals of Native characters the same way we do and see all the underlying stereotypes and traumas that you might not see but we do.

This tiktok about someone's pre-transition self is so so SO tender and I just want anyone who has transitioned and may be mourning their old self to see this and to know it's okay. It's okay to miss that person you once were, it's okay to wish you had embraced what you had and who you were before transitioning. It doesn't mean you regret it, and it doesn't mean you made the wrong decisions.

It's okay to think about that person, it's okay to mourn them, and it's okay to wonder. The person you were before transitioning may have been a trick of the light, but it doesn't mean they weren't special while they were here.

Everyone's experience is different... but if you find yourself feeling this, just know it's okay. You don't have to completely block out every aspect and memory of who you were before. It's okay if you do, but you don't have to.

i resent the whole premise of HAVING to drive. this country's culture around cars and shitty public transport are engineered to disenfranchise poor people. you buy the car and have to pay tax, pay for inspections, plates, insurance. you probably need one of these things to get to work btw. everyone needing their own car to function is an obvious american individualist "freedom" > the environment or other people thing. you're a second class citizen without transportation, and if you're in a food desert or rural area you're just hungry and isolated. meanwhile people overseas are getting straight up murdered for oil to power the cars they force us to have.

"hey you wanna climb in this metal death trap and travel at high speeds down poorly maintained paths and over crumbling bridges. this is a normal part of our daily routines and fuck you for questioning it or wanting to opt out in any way."

List of Sea Creatures Which Have Tried But Failed To Convince Me To Go Into The Ocean

1. Sea Dragons

Remarkable, unlikely, ethereal. A fairytale creature, but ultimately not trustworthy. a combination of kelpie and the fae, it will ask me a riddle and steal my soul. at least one of these is photoshopped. nice try sea dragon

2. Bubble Snails

© Colin Lee | www.zenfolio.com/colinle

these are portals to another realm. i may be unsatisfied with my dimension, but i am not fool enough to follow a colorful stranger to a secondary location. you'll have to try harder, briny marine abductors

3. Shells. Just shiny carved shells i found on instagram makes a compelling argument but i remain unconvinced. never trust anything you find on instagram

4. Salp Chains

not gonna lie, this one almost made me reconsider. idk what a planktic tunicate is, but i respect their lifestyle choices. if i ever do join a hivemind, this is top of the list

5. Frosted Nudibranch

a combination bt a sailor moon trinket & a pokemon evolution stone; has the power to force me into a magical girl transformation. unfortunately i am responsibility-avoidant and refuse to wear anything less comfortable than sweatpants. also magical transformations give me motion sickness. hard pass, but would use as a nightlight

6. Lettuce Sea Slug. For similar reasons

6. Royal Starfish

honestly thought this was a claymation sculpture. starfish were actually a compelling reason to go in the ocean until I remembered they can move, and i want nothing to do with that nonsense

GIF by jupiter2

7. Costasiella

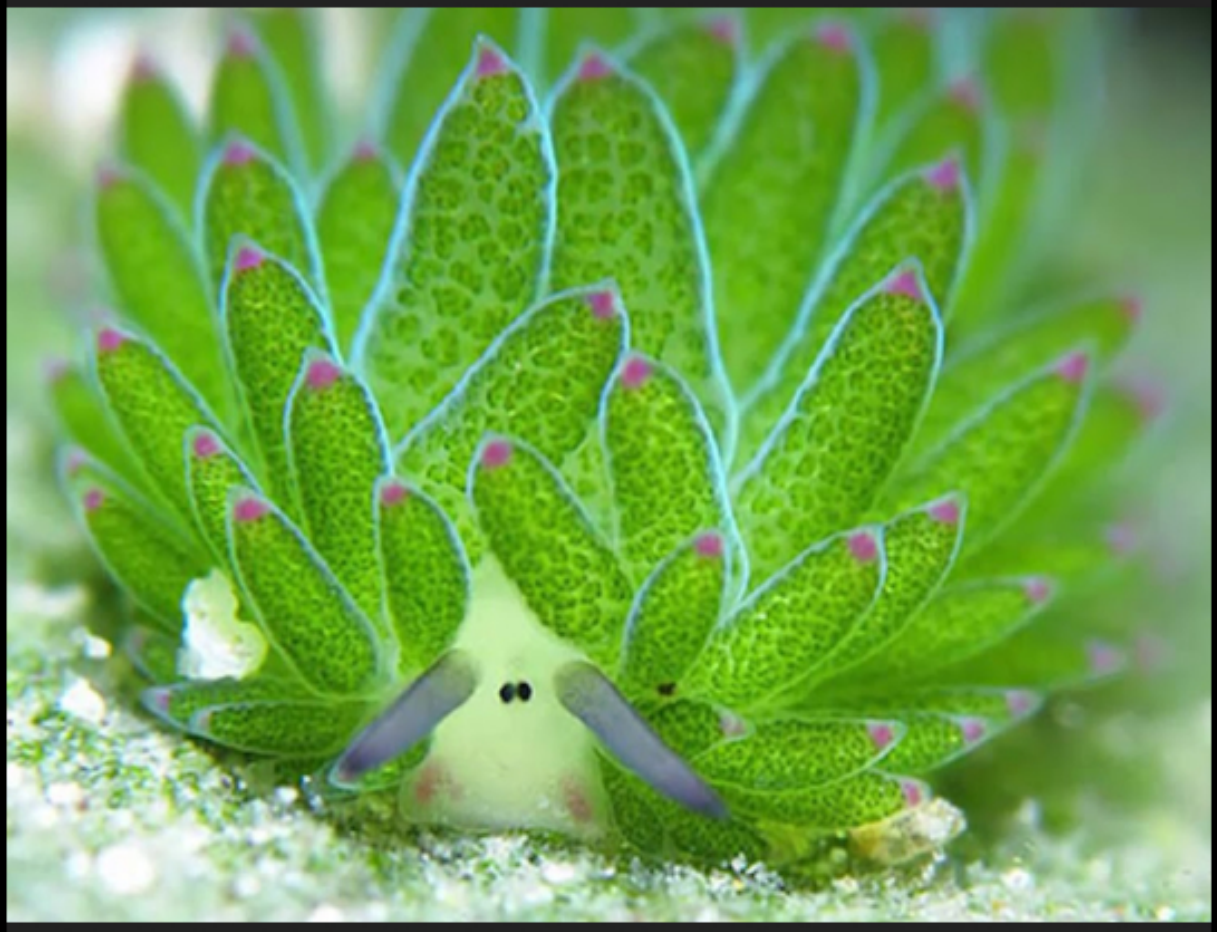
this is genuinely the only one i have a hard time saying no to. this is the perfect being. if i was an animated protagonist, this would be my chosen cartoon sidekick, my vaguely animalish sidecharacter who speaks in a silent but expressive language only i can translate. incandescent perfection. pure and unsullied, truly sinless. look at those goddamn eyes.



In conclusion,

sea slugs are the only compelling group of creatures who could possibly tempt me into the soulless void of the salty depths. however, as i possess a great deal of caution & terror, i will continue to stick with aquariums. i have been tempted, but have overcome. the ocean may invade my nightmares but it will not claim my soul. i bite my thumb at thee, Poseidon! go stub your toe on coral

Astronomical Ring

What if you could wear the entire universe on your finger?

Since ancient times, astronomers around the world have used models of the sky to make calculations. With the advent of the armillary sphere, stargazers were given a physical model to better visualize the lines of celestial longitude and latitude. Created independently in ancient Greece and ancient China, these armillary spheres consisted of spherical rings centered on either the Earth or the Sun. During the 16th and 17th centuries, these astronomy tools were sized down to become fashionable finger rings that moved just like regular armillary spheres.

This beautiful and unique Ring will make a lovely gift for your friends and family!

Berated and mocked for our relation to sexuality and womanhood? Check. Hated for our "deviancy from the norm"? Check. gender euphoria experiences with a self determined approach to womanhood, attraction and sexuality celebration of bodies beyond the norm

creating our own culture of appreciating complex and intertwined expressions of gender and sexuality

destigmatization and newfound respect of and for our bodies

true sisterhood based on choice not force ravenclaw-burning Follow

#idk why i’m so unreasonably angry#maybe cuz it’s my fav line

it’s also because Leonard COHEN (!) was Jewish and this is a quintessentially Jewish line, and changing it to that level of Annoying Certainty is stripping it of its Jewish meaning and imbuing it with that particularly American smug evangelical Christian attitude that makes me tired, so very tired

Yeah, I wonder why the verses that reference specific Jewish mystical and chassidic concepts that aren't readily understood by American "I love Jews, you know, Jesus was Jewish!" Christians never get any airtime. Funny that.

You say I took the name in vain
I don't even know the name
But if I did, well really, what's it to you?
There's a blaze of light
In every word
It doesn't matter which you heard
The holy or the broken Hallelujah

These are specifically about Chassidic Jewish theories of the holy language, how each letter and combination of letters in Hebrew contains the essence of the divine spark and if used correctly, can unlock or uncover the divine spark in the mundane material word. And of course, there are secret names of God which, when spoken by any ordinary human would kill them, but if you are worthy and holy and righteous can be used to perform miracles or even to behold the glory of God face-to-face. The words themselves have power. Orthodox Jews often won't even pronounce the word "hallelujah" in it's entirety in conversation, because the "yah" sound at the end is a True Name of God (there are hundreds, supposedly) and thus too holy to say outside of prayer.

None of this is to mention how David's sin in sleeping with Batshevah (the subject of much of the song, with a brief deviation to Shimshon and Delilah) is considered the turning point in the Tanach that ultimately dooms the Davidic line at the cosmological level and thus dooms Jewish sovereignty and independence altogether. From a Christian perspective this led to Jesus, the King of Kings, and that's all very well and good for them, but for the Jews, the Davidic line never returned and is the central tragedy of the total arc of the Torah. Like, our Bible doesn't have a happy ending? And that's what this song is about? There's no Grace - you just have to sit with the sin and its consequence.

Of course, Cohen is referencing all of this ironically, and personalizing these very high-level religious concepts. Like the point of this song is that Cohen, the songwriter, is identifying with David, the psalmist, and identifying his own sins with David's. The ache that you hear in this song is that the two thousand year exile that resulted from one wrong night of passion and Cohen feels that the pain he has caused to his lover is of equally monumental infamy. Basically, in a certain light, the whole of Psalms is a vain effort for David to atone for his sin and I think Cohen was writing this song in wonderment that David could eternally praise the God who would not forgive him and would force him and his people into exile. But he ultimately gets how you have to surrender to the inexorable force of God in the face of your own inadequacies and how to surrender is to worship and to worship is to praise - hence, Hallelujah. You can either do the right thing and worship God from the start, or you can fuck up, be punished, and thus be forced to beg for His forgiveness. It's the terrible inevitability of praise that's driving him mad.

Like honestly, I identify with this song so strongly as an off-the-derech Jew, I sometimes wonder what Christians can possibly hear in this song, as it speaks so specifically to the sadomasochistic relationship that a lapsed Jew has with their God. It's such a different song from a Christian theological perspective it's almost unrecognizable, man. This song continues to be a wonder of postmodern Jewish theology and sexuality from start to finish. Don't let anyone give you any "Judeo-Christian" narishkeit. This is a Jewish song.

(Sorry about the wild tangent it's just 2AM and I love this song so dang much, you guys.)

That last bit from @stoneandbloodandwater, that's a great articulation of the well of feeling, memory, storytelling, and culture packed into one of the most Jewish songs ever to get real famous. The song is both surrender and defiance, and that those are actually a single path together, not two opposite choices.

@sweatie_

leonard cohen didn't write hallelujah for baptist christian youth choirs... it's for being jewish, crying in an empty room, and shaking your fist at g-d!!!

wetwareproblem Follow

A small addition: This song is such a deeply resonant Jewish touchstone that every synagogue I have ever attended uses its melody in services from time to time.

It is so important, so powerful, so spiritually resonant that we use it in prayer.

prismatic-bell

If memory serves me, the cover we most often hear came about specifically because Jeff Buckley was like “man, this song is badass but I don’t know that I can do its concepts justice” and Leonard Cohen was like “you need different verses? Here, I wrote over eighty of the fuckers, pick what you want to use” and so Buckley put together verses that spoke to him as a non-Jew about sexuality and this idea of a failed relationship.

Which wouldn’t be an issue if Christians didn’t then take his adaptation (done, I emphasize again, with Cohen’s blessing) and rewrite it in ways THAT DO NOT COME FROM THE ORIGINAL VERSES.

please elaborate

i live in norfolk virginia, and there's this guy called the black widow who lives here

he does operate kind of like a real superhero, and he stops car break-ins and stuff like that! apparently he even stopped a case of domestic violence once. i don't know if a lot of people know he exists, but he definitely seems like a nice dude, and he has a lot of articles centered around him

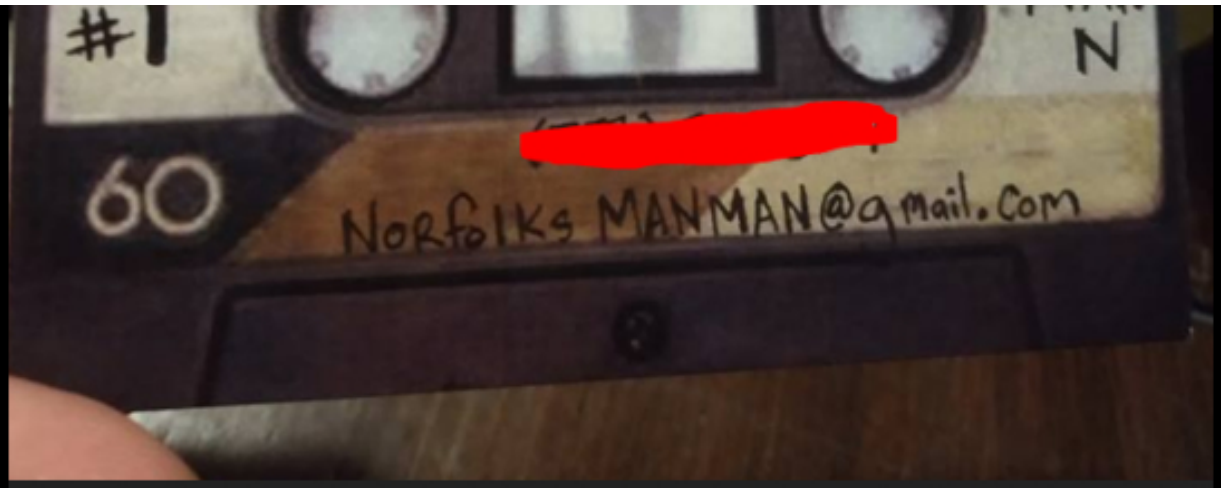
but. there's also a supervillain?

this is Man Man, founder of "AdaManMantium inc." He is both legally and occupationally a supervillain. that's not even a joke he has actual paperwork designating himself as a supervillain. he even has a business card



Man Man is pretty obsessed with “testing” the black widow in a lot of different ways. like. man man threatened to give his (man man’s) cat to a kill shelter if the black widow didn’t solve a riddle he gave him (whether he actually did it or not i have no idea)

and he also got 35 people to donate blood once the black widow solved ANOTHER riddle which was cool, and there was also this time where he went to a gay bar and told people that if they bought drinks he’d send the equivalent of the money they spent to the westboro baptist church (but since they refused he sent them to a charity)

Man Man is 🎧 listening to Depeshe Mode with Matsuda Yuuma. •••

January 24 · 🌐

Went out to #MJsTavern met some IRL heros! Most people, all shown here refused drinks if I matched the price to donate to Westboro Baptist Church, three took the drinks but refused pictures (dicks), that's still 8/11 good folk in Norfolk. I'll be donating about $100 to the #forkids foundation because of these #Heros. I also got to meet another REAL LIFE HERO The DEATHS HEAD MOTH #DHM Norfolk's OG HERO, he gave me a signed MOTHERANG! #DHM one of his more recent schemes included... going to the mayor of the city and trying to get him to outlaw masks.

the reason im telling this to you. is because my mom is dating man man?

blocked out the private stuff but you can definitely see that its the same guy (and also him cosplaying as. Him.)

my mom has always had questionable taste in men (she had a crush on onision a while ago) but like. she's dating an actual supervillain now which i think is fucking hysterical

so basically. tl;dr. my town has superheroes and supervillains in it and my mom has decided to date a supervillain

The Outbursts of Everett True was a comic strip that ran in papers from 1905 to 1927, wherein the aforementioned Everett True regularly beat the everliving shit out of rude people as a warning to anyone else who might consider being rude. Men have not only been taking up too much room on public transport for about as long as public transport has existed, but the people around them have been irritated about it for at least a hundred years. The next time someone tries to claim that manspreading is a false phenomenon, please direct them to this strip so that Everett True can correct their misconceptions with an umbrella upside the head.

Future imperative [edit]

Latin also has a future imperative or 2nd imperative,[147] ending in -tō (pl. -tōte), which is used to request someone to do something at a future time, or if something else happens first:

- sī quid acciderit, ... scrībitō (Cicero)[148]
  'if anything happens, write to me'

This imperative is very common in early writers such as Plautus and Cato, but it is also found in later writers such as Martial:

- ubi nōs lāverimus, sī volēs, lavātō (Terence)[149]
  'when we have finished washing, get washed if you wish'.
- crūdam si edēs, in acētum intinguitō (Cato)[150]
  'if you eat it (cabbage) raw, dip it in vinegar.'
- rīdētō multum quī tē, Sextille, cinaedum dīxerit et digitum porrigitō medium. (Martial)[151]
  'Laugh loudly at anyone who calls you camp, Sextillus, and stick up your middle finger at him.'

I was reviewing some rules of Latin grammar and I was struck at how this brief passage in Wikipedia features sample text with all the highlights of Ancient Rome. We've got:

- Cicero writing to his friend Atticus, begging him to send any interesting news from Rome
- a line discussing bathing in play that was a rip-off of an earlier Greek play
- Cato telling the reader the best way to eat cabbage
- Martial saying that you should laugh at and flip off anyone who calls you effeminate / implies you are a bottom

cervinesatyr

my brain can't translate any of these normally.

'ubi nos laverimus, si voles, lavato' in my head is 'When we have finished washing, if you want, get washed!!' in my head, despite that not being the tone at all a ha! but consider, sleepy cat snuggling up with you and then reaching out a single paw specifically to hold your hand, and then dragging it back and cuddling it like a teddy bear

you make a good point, however, have you considered the moment when a cat sort of headbutt-burrows itself under your arm, pressing its little tiny head up against you and under you like it is almost trying to cuddle so much that you merge

The first time you boot up Cyberpunk: 2077 and walk around Night City, you’re greeted with all of the bells and whistles and eye candy that you’ve come to expect from video games this big. The sound design is crisp and textured, the UI is slick and futuristic, you really feel like you’re there, blah blah blah. Hopefully by now, the analyst at CD Projekt Red whose job it is to compile review scores has skimmed this headline, added a row to their spreadsheet that says “Hard Drive – 10/10”, and moved on. Unless this is the worst-case scenario and they only check the average score on Metacritic, in which case the developers are pretty much screwed no matter what.

Funny thing is: CD Projekt and their sub-divisions are all super great to most people who work with them. They're famously generous and kind, giving out sweets and food and bonuses regularly.

If any game should get this article treatment it's Naughty Dog.

this is gonna be one of those rare things i (1) reblog on main and not my shitpost blog and (2) leave a comment on

if you have never worked a media job you literally cannot serve up a “but they’re so NICE and give TREATS” opinion — my studio only occasionally asks us to work a saturday and it’s usually voluntary, we’re fed, and paid our day rate, and i am still exhausted come monday. and that’s after a standard 8-9 hour work week.

hauling 10, 12, 14, 16 hour days, doing so repeatedly, doing so with no end in sight is beyond exhausting. i have been adjacent to an entire group of my friends going through endless crunch — a death march, as its referred to — and it was emotionally and physically devastating on them.

and that feeling doesn’t end when the product is shipped. you are expected to come back to work on monday, you get some platitudes from your leadership (the ineffectiveness of which put you in the crunch position in the first place, so their words only make everyone feel worse) and you are expected to perform. but you can't. you need to recover. for days, for weeks, for months.

or have we already forgotten the kotaku article about bioware?

"I actually cannot count the amount of 'stress casualties' we had on Mass Effect: Andromeda or Anthem," said a third former BioWare developer in an email. "A 'stress casualty' at BioWare means someone had such a mental breakdown from the stress they're just gone for one to three months. Some come back, some don't."

i stopped seeing my friends for months when this happened to them. and when i did see them, they weren't themselves. they were crying all the time. when i worked these kinds of hours under this kind of pressure at my marketing job, i was crying all the time. you spend all of sunday dreading monday. you stop going to sleep until you're too exhausted to funciton, because going to sleep means you wake up to go and do the thing you're dreading.

i think people outside of arts careers, specifically media arts careers, think that we go into this for the thrill of creating and that's it, we can subsist off of that. full offense, but you're incorrect.

it's just a fucking job. entertaining people is not worth the kind of burnout crunch puts people through. there is nothing romantic about that. media workers are there to do a job and crunch is nothing but a failure of management that makes games and tv shows and movies worse. no one does good work when they're tired.

i can't stop anyone from playing this game but boy howdy i will never shut up about the labor abuses that went into making it.

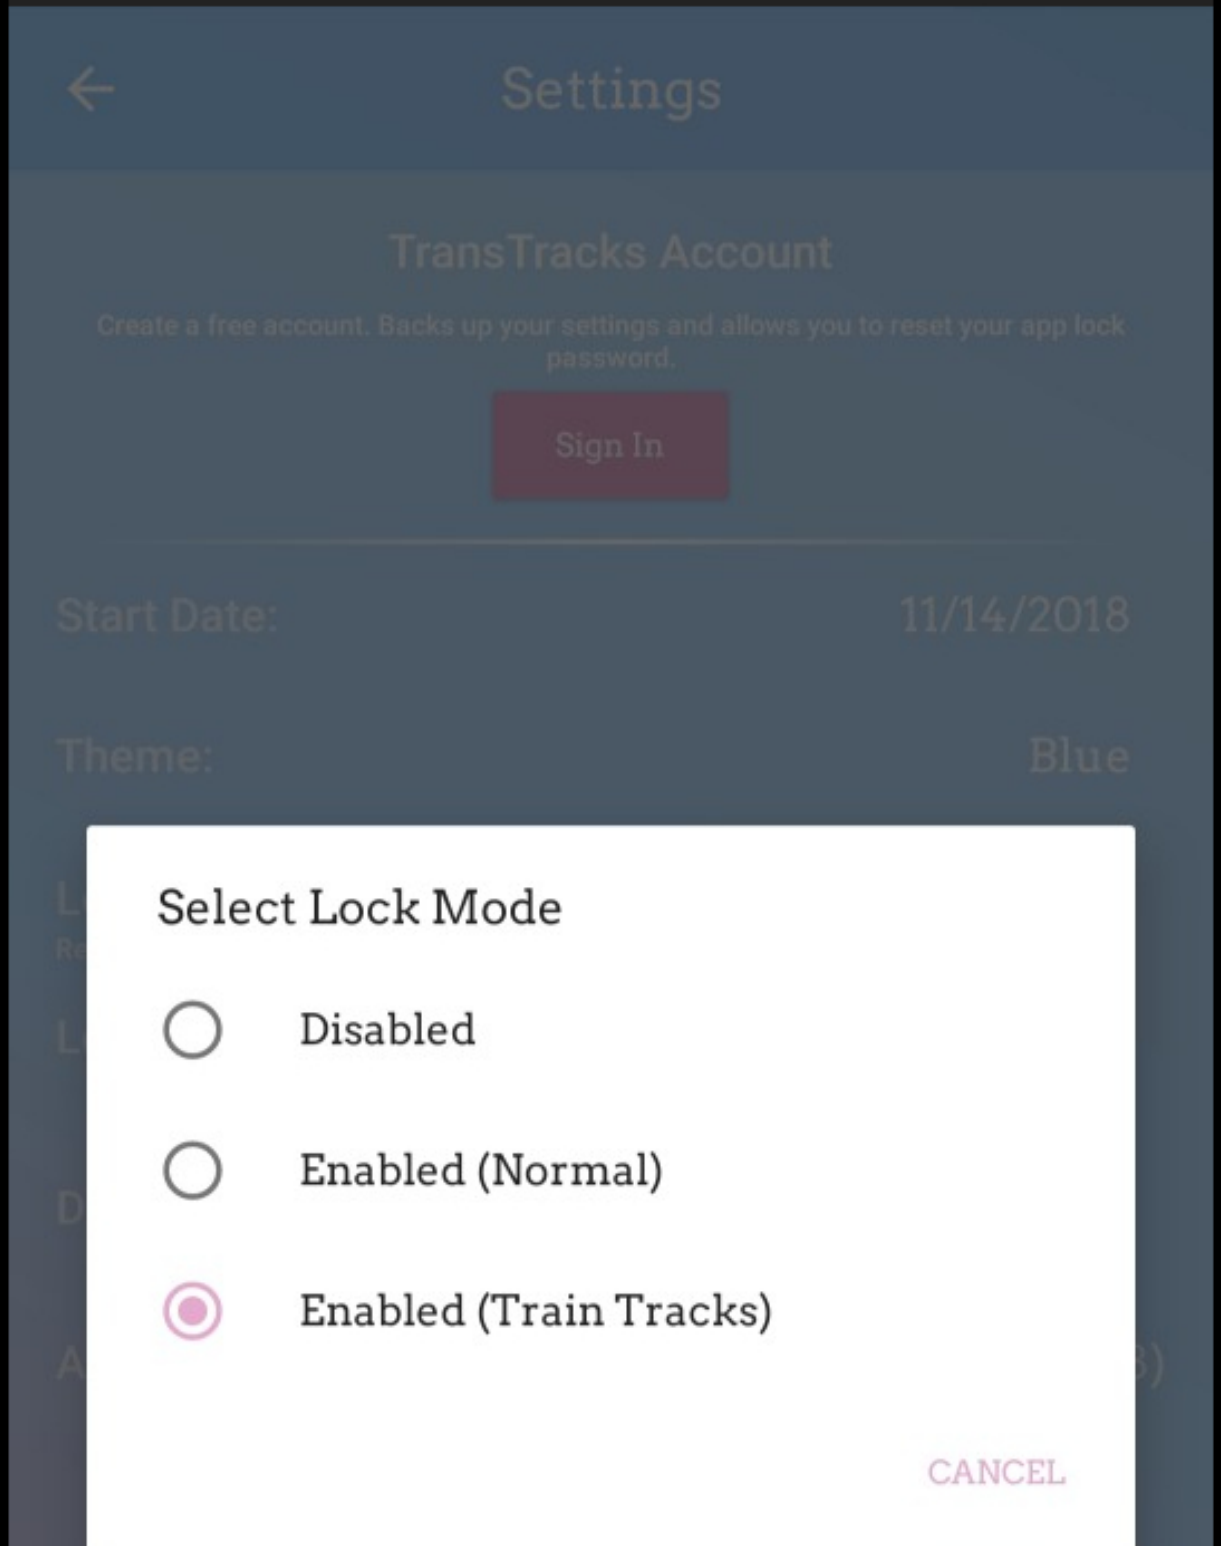
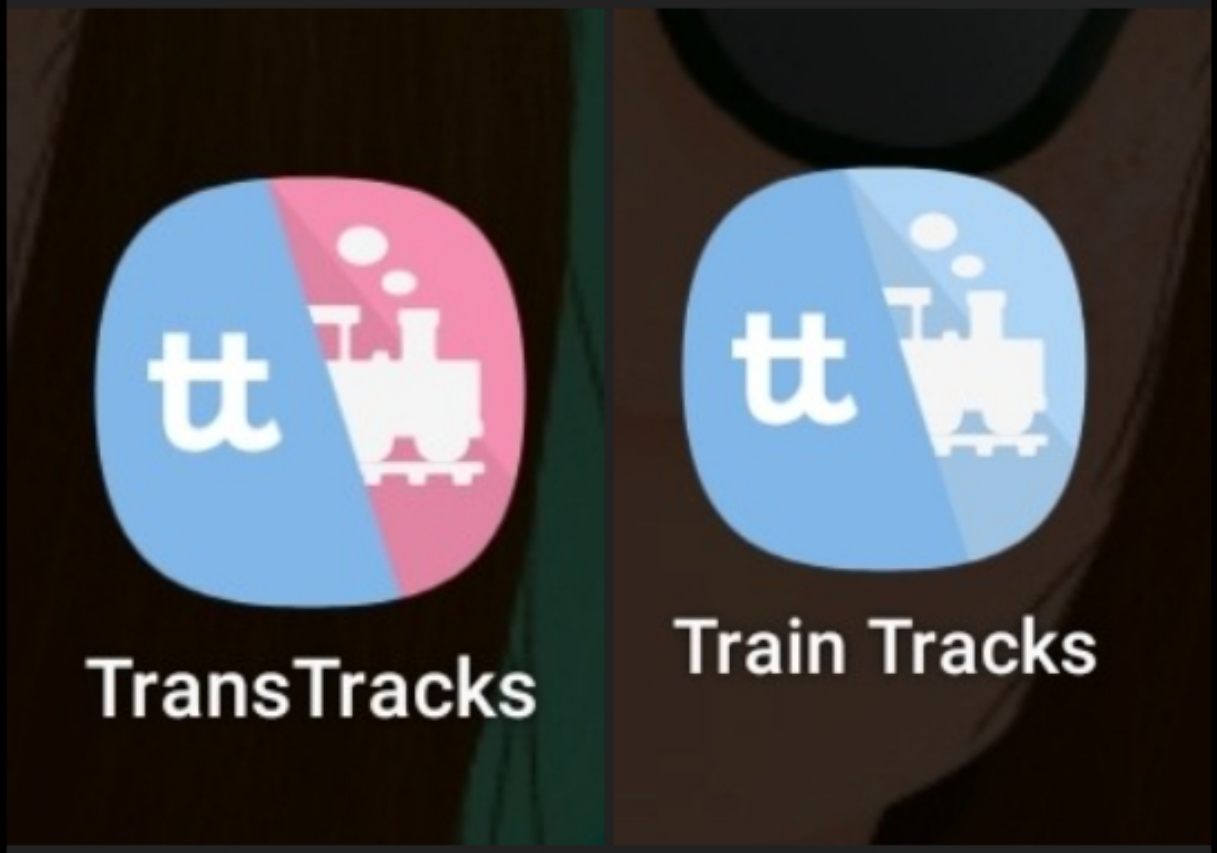
oh hey, stealth and closeted trans people! i keep forgetting to mention this and idk if everyone already knows but there's this free app called transtracks (android + iOS) that acts as your standard transition tracking app (medical transition, social transition, surgical transition, whatever you're tracking) except it has a stealth mode!

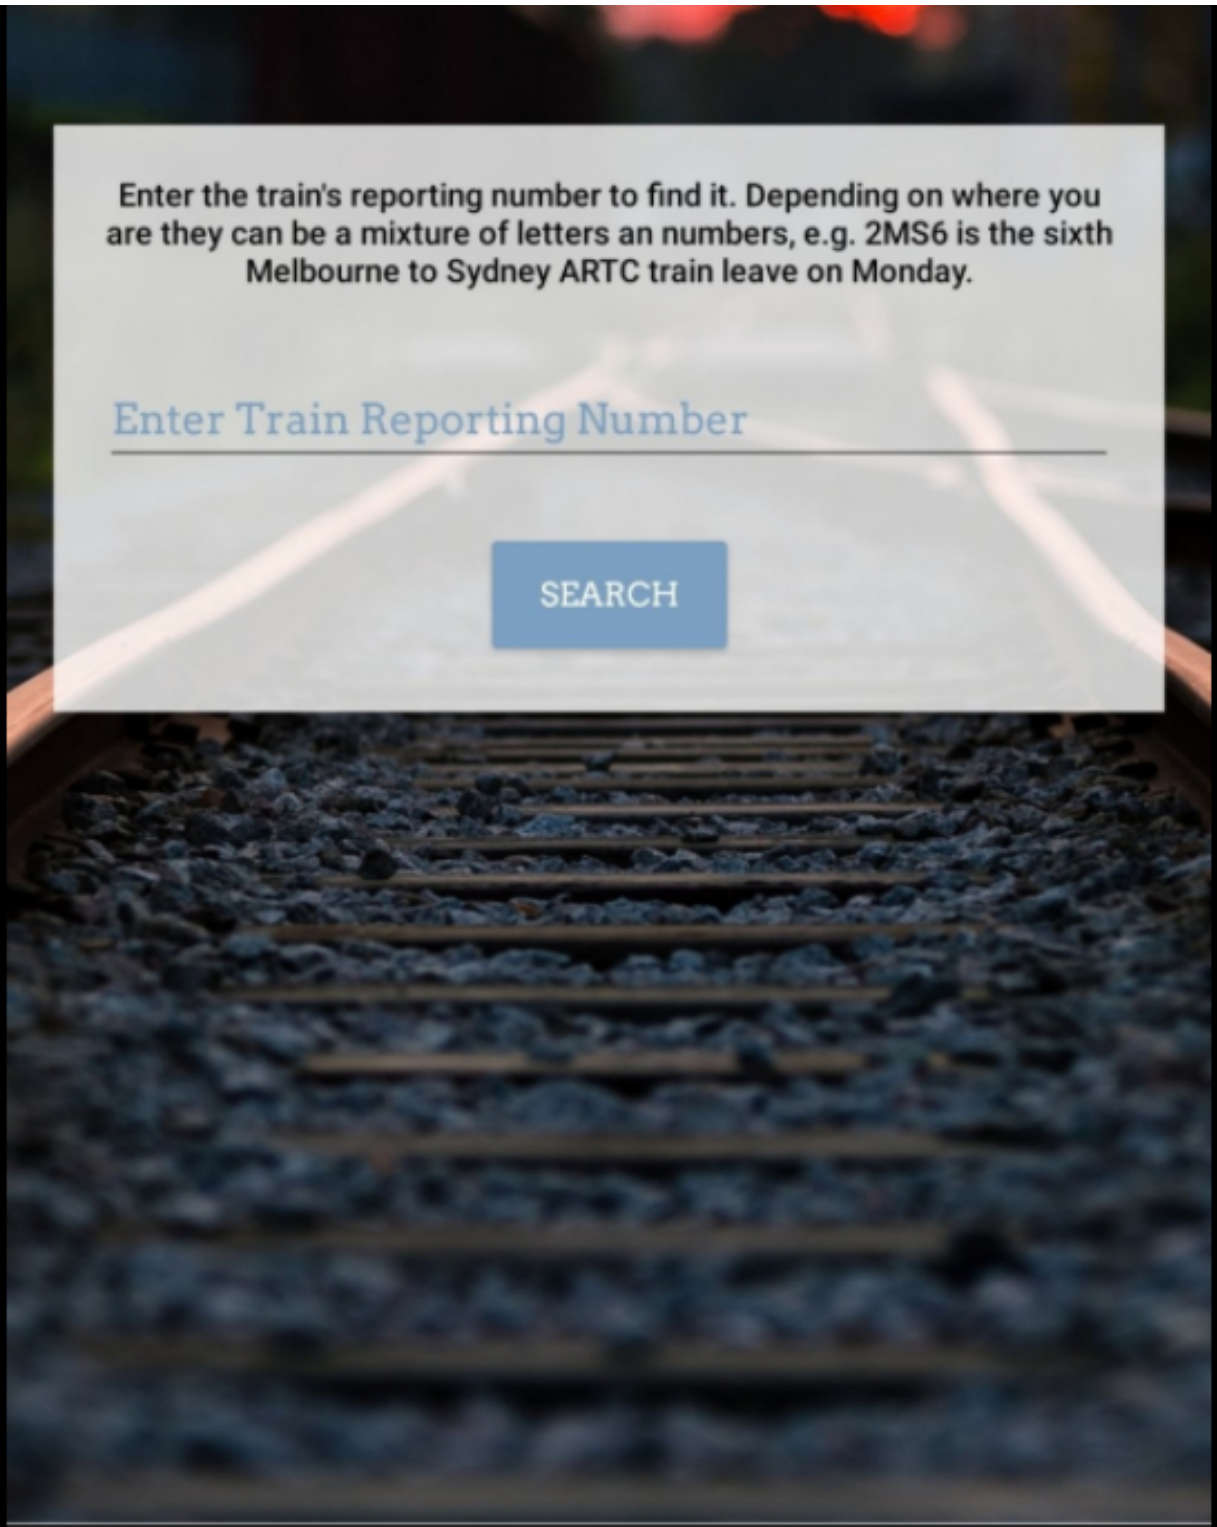
just change your passwords settings to "train tracks"...



... and voila! the app has become for train schedules.



this is what the new decoy password screen pulls up:



it isn't exactly safe for me to be out IRL so i've been using this app for a while now! it's mostly helpful for my peace of mind and in case somebody needs to use my phone because i'm out to my family- but anybody living at home who isnt out or who has nosey/transphobic parents- maybe give it a shot!

Dyscalculia is a specific learning disorder that focuses on difficulties related to numbers and mathematical concepts.

But that is not all it affects!

People with Dyscalculia may also struggle with:

- Basic Math Concepts
- Directions/Reading Maps
- Recognizing Patterns
- Time Estimations
- Poor Working Memory
- Spatial Awareness & More!

Today's comic is a special one because it discusses #dyscalculia, which co-occurs frequently with #adhd. I personally live with it and it's something I feel should be discussed more often.

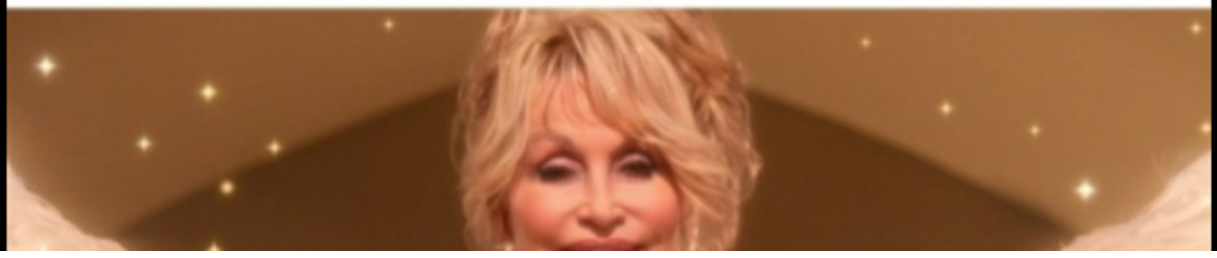
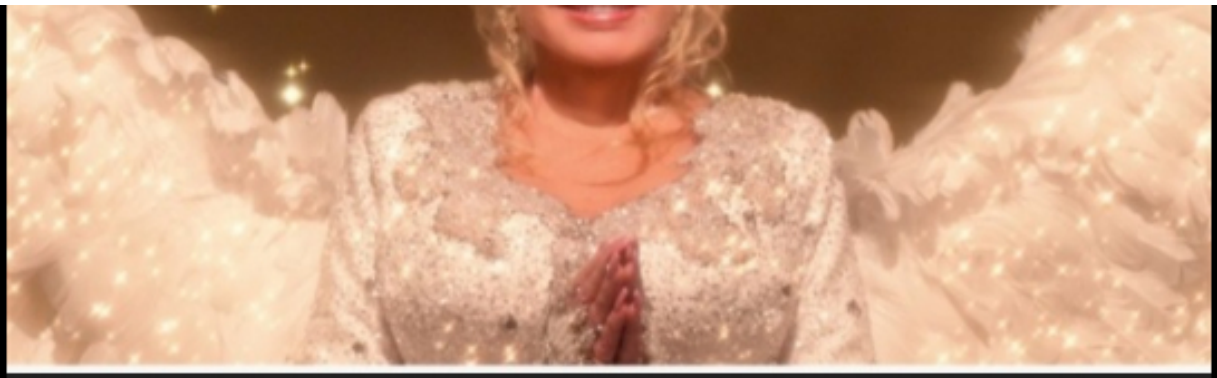
Dolly Parton saved the life of a 9-year-old actor on set of new Christmas movie

After all, Parton plays an angel in the new movie.





Dec. 10, 2020, 7:50 AM PST / Source: TODAY

By Lindsay Lowe

Dolly Parton is literally a lifesaver!

Talia Hill, a 9-year-old actor and dancer in Parton's Netflix holiday special, "Christmas on the Square," revealed that the country superstar saved her life by pulling her out of the path of an oncoming vehicle.

Talia remembered the moment in a recent interview with Inside Edition.

"We were on set, and I was at the hot chocolate station, and they said go back to your beginning positions," she said. "So there was a vehicle moving, and I was walking, and then somebody grabbed me and pulled me back, and I looked up and it was Dolly Parton."

This is a picture of the big book of Alcoholics Anonymous.....On the left it has all of the pages ripped out that refer to God and or higher power and on the right it's in its entirety.....Any questions about what the program is really about???

AA is a faith-based organization. It touts alcoholism as a “disease” and then proceeds to treat it in no way medically, instead prescribing life-long dependence on what amounts to prayer sessions, with relapse blamed on personal moral failings and lack of commitment (not “working the program”). That is, the blame is attributed entirely to the patient, not the treatment.

Unlike any other disease, there is no discussion of “maybe this isn’t the right treatment for you.” There is no doubt whatsoever that this is the one and only way to treat your problem. You’re saved by AA or you fall into depravity. A false dichotomy for the patient and the program itself remains unfalsifiable. It never fails, only the patient fails. No part of it ever gets anywhere near the biology, the physiology, the neurochemistry of alcohol and addiction.

As with any faith-based belief system, there’s also no sense of gradation or proportion. Drinking a glass of wine or going on a three day black-out bender provide identical results: you failed, and you start over from the beginning at day zero. As with Xtians and their divine forgiveness, if you’re going to repent for a single murder, you might as well kill the entire village. If you’re going to fall off the wagon, you might as dive off in spectacular fashion.

Paradoxically, it creates an unhealthy relationship with and fixation on alcohol, like the Xtian fixation on looking for the devil’s temptations and attempts to trip you up, or the antiracist who knows everything is racist, you just need to find it.

There are actual medical treatments for alcohol use disorder.

> I visited one of three private treatment centers, called the Contral

> Clinics, that Sinclair co-founded in Finland. [..] The most common course of treatment involves six months of cognitive behavioral therapy, a goal-oriented form of therapy, with a clinical psychologist. Treatment typically also includes a physical exam, blood work, and a prescription for naltrexone or nalmefene, a newer opioid antagonist approved in more than two dozen countries. When I asked how much all of this cost, Keski-Pukkila looked uneasy. "Well," he told me, "it's 2,000 euros." That's about $2,500—a fraction of the cost of inpatient rehab in the United States, which routinely runs in the tens of thousands of dollars for a 28-day stay.
> When I told Keski-Pukkila this, his eyes grew wide. "What are they doing for that money?" he asked. I listed some of the treatments offered at top-of-the-line rehab centers: equine therapy, art therapy, mindfulness mazes in the desert. "That doesn't sound scientific," he said, perplexed. I didn't mention that some bare-bones facilities charge as much as $40,000 a month and offer no treatment beyond AA sessions led by minimally qualified counselors.

religion-is-a-mental-illness

Because someone is lying in the comments...

From AA's "Big Book," Chapter 3.

> "We are like men who have lost their legs; they never grow new ones. Neither does there appear to be any kind of treatment which will make alcoholics of our kind like other men. We have tried every imaginable remedy. In some instances there has been brief recovery, followed always by a still worse relapse. Physicians who are familiar with alcoholism agree there is no such thing as making a normal drinker out of an alcoholic. Science may one day accomplish this, but it hasn't done so yet."

This is explicitly false. Not surprising given how long ago this tome was written. If it dove into the subject of space travel, it would also say "Science may one day land us on the moon, but it hasn't done so yet."

Physicians do not agree. There are actual medical doctors dedicated to the study of the biology and neurology of addiction. For alcohol, the phenomenon's official name is "Alcohol Use Disorder." They have been able to make a normal drinker out of an alcoholic.

- https://www.mayoclinic.org/diseases-conditions/alcohol-use-disorder/symptoms-causes/syc-20369243
- https://advances.sciencemag.org/content/5/9/eaax4043
- https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC4161700/
- https://www.health.harvard.edu/blog/alcohol-use-disorder-when-is-drinking-a-problem-2018122015585

Today, one could not have "tried every imaginable remedy" and find AA to be the only one. There is a list later in the chapter that includes, among those "every imaginable remedies":

> "Drinking beer only, limiting the number of drinks, never drinking alone, never drinking in the morning, drinking only at home, never having it in the house, never drinking during business hours, drinking only at parties, switching from scotch to brandy, drinking only natural wines..."

Basically a do-it-yourself list by someone unqualified to treat the problem. This is like trying to fix your car by pouring the different contents of your fridge into the tank. In the world of AA, not only do you self-diagnose, you also self-treat.

Again, from Chapter 3:

> "Many doctors and psychiatrists agree with our conclusions. One of these men, staff member of a world-renowned hospital, recently made this statement to some of us: "What you say about the general hopelessness of the average alcoholic's plight is, in my opinion, correct. As to two of you men, whose stories I have heard, there is no doubt in my mind that you were 100% > hopeless, apart from divine help. Had you offered yourselves as patients at this hospital, I would not have taken you, if I had been able to avoid it. People like you are too heartbreaking. Though not a religious person, I have profound respect for the spiritual approach in such cases as yours. For most cases, there is virtually no other solution."

> Once more: The alcoholic at certain times has no effective mental defense against the first drink. Except in a few rare cases, neither he nor any other human being can provide such a defense. His defense must come from a Higher Power."

An unnamed doctor of an unnamed "world renowned hospital" who was attending an AA meeting. This is the quality of their "evidence."

Seriously, they're saying what they're up to explicitly.

https://www.theguardian.com/society/2015/nov/29/alcoholics-anonymous-saved-my-life-but-i-lost-my-faith

> When I went to my first Alcoholics Anonymous meeting, 15 years ago, God was and always had been the opium of the people. But AA's 12-step programme demanded, or at least strongly suggested, that I relinquish myself to a higher power. It didn't have to be God per se, but I was assured that, if I didn't find something, I'd probably drink myself to death.

Why would a "disease" or "illness" need a higher power? Since when does cancer require deities to cure? This is veiled predation. Someone who doesn't believe in a god is going to be vulnerable to suggestion, literally at the threat of death.

> Last year, retired Harvard psychiatry professor Lance Dodes released The Sober Truth: Debunking the Bad Science Behind 12-Step Programs and the Rehab Industry. In his book, Dodes examines data surrounding AA's success rate and concludes that the programme is effective for as few as 5-8% of people. We'll probably never know the real figure, but it's certainly less than > that of naltrexone. In 2001 Sinclair reported a 78% success rate in reducing and, sometimes, cutting out patients' alcohol consumption altogether.

AA isn't even effective.

> Naltrexone inhibits the euphoria alcoholics get from drinking and allows them to drink normally. This is called "pharmacological extinction". It means that, eventually, the drinker no longer associates alcohol with a high. (According to AA, that association is never lost.) What became known as the Sinclair Method has now been used to treat thousands of alcoholics in Finland, where he worked. In the rest of the world, naltrexone is largely unheard of (although nalmefene, a similar treatment, is available on prescription in Britain).

"Science may one day accomplish this, but it hasn't done so yet." Remember that?

Like the bible, the Big Book was a snapshot of the then-current medical and scientific ignorance. And like the bible, why would you rely on it when we already know that its claims aren't true?

It's literally all anecdotes. Here's Chapter 1. Change the number in the URL to read the rest.

> Aside from no longer believing in a higher power, I'd developed chronic OCD. My doctor told me that AA wasn't helping. Fourteen years earlier, a medical professional had suggested that I needed AA. Now one was insisting that it was damaging my health and, what's more, that I should leave. Soon after, I discovered cognitive behavioural therapy. Whereas AA actively encourages obsessive thinking, CBT challenges it. I finally realised the extent to which AA had in fact been nurturing my anxiety. SMART Recovery is a group that helps alcoholics using CBT rather than the 12 steps. It's slowly growing here and in America but, unfortunately, is still dwarfed by the size of AA because so few people have heard of it.

AA is a prayer circle that treats alcohol as sin, and makes believers as obsessive about it as Xtians are about sin. Like any faith-based system, it seeks no disconfirmation, and merely insists that it always works, even though it is clearly shown that it actually doesn't.

Its own scripture literally, explicitly states that it can only be solved spiritually, by appealing to a "higher power". Saying otherwise is lying, ignorance, or pulling the same thing as a Xtian insisting "it's a metaphor!" or "no longer applies!"

Funny how I pulled this directly from the AA website though, isn't it?

Dear tumblr, have we heard about the sweeping reforms announced by the new LA DA?? Because I read a thread by the guy this morning that actually made me weep.

adarkerbeamoflight Follow

Here it is if you haven’t seen it yet:

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

For decades we attached felony consequences to low-level offenses. It foreclosed job & housing opportunities, exacerbated recidivism, crime & homelessness, & created more victims.

2 53 774

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

We must design a system that actually listens to, protects, and restores victims.

Beginning immediately, victims will no longer be required to testify to receive victim services.

And this office will extend victim services to families of those killed by law enforcement.

10 114 1,114

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

I have already pledged to re-open four fatal officer-involved shootings.

My office will now convene a Use of Force Review Board to review fatal use of force cases dating back to at least 2012.

We must hold police accountable to restore trust in law enforcement.

9 140 1,193

George Gascón
@GeorgeGascon

40 years ago I walked my first beat as a young police officer.

Today, I was sworn in as the 43rd District Attorney of Los Angeles.

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 6h

Replying to @GeorgeGascon

I am not the same man I was when I first put on the uniform.

One of the many reasons for that is because of situations I faced as a young officer - situations & experiences that have stayed with me, and that continue to shape my approach to this work.

9 42 727

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

Those experiences taught me the criminal justice system is fundamentally broken.

Today, we will usher in a new era of criminal justice, and transform the largest criminal justice jurisdiction in America.

6 126 1,202

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

The money bail system is as unsafe as it is unjust.

Money is a terrible proxy for risk posed to society.

So today we will end cash bail for any misdemeanor, non-serious or non-violent felony offense.

And I will end bail completely January 1.

35 825 3,804

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

The pursuit of justice is timeless and that's why these policies will be applied retroactively. At least 20,000 people currently incarcerated in prison will now be eligible for consideration for resentencing.

This will save CA BILLIONS of dollars.

4 168 1,491

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

At least 50% of all persons sentenced to state prison from LA are rated low-risk to reoffend by prison officials.

95% of individuals who have served 20 years or more are rated low-risk to reoffend.

These excessive sentences are NOT making us safer.

4 95 1,229

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

My office will prioritize consideration for ppl convicted of nonviolent crimes, those deemed low risk for release, ppl with demonstrated records of rehabilitation, older individuals, ppl who are especially at risk for COVID-19, and ppl sentenced to adult prison terms as children.

4 59 957

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

The resentencing process will be a significant undertaking and will include input from victims and victim advocates. The @AmityFoundation, in partnership with the Returning Home Well initiative, have promised to assist everyone resentenced.

4 41 699

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

There are currently 215 people on CA's death row from LA County alone.

An astonishing 85% of them are people of color.

The death penalty does not make us safer. It's racist, morally untenable, irreversible, and expensive.

And today, it's off the table.

24 343 2,097

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

In the 80s & 90s, America defunded public housing & mental health.

We turned public health problems into criminal ones - the results were disastrous.

Now, we will begin diverting 1st time low-level misdemeanors into services instead of criminalizing homelessness & poverty.

8 183 1,382

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

Experts estimate that hundreds of individuals behind bars today will be eligible to be freed tomorrow under this new pretrial release policy.

6 119 1,337

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

Enhancements, a legacy of the "tough-on-crime" era, are a principal driver of excessive sentences & mass incarceration.

CA enacted over 100 enhancements which are outdated, incoherent, & applied unfairly.

To end mass incarceration in LA we will cease filing ALL enhancements.

4 158 1,386

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

CA's 1994 3 Strikes Law has been a disaster.

In 1980 CA had a prison pop of ~23,000.

In 1990, that number grew to ~94,000.

And In 1999, 5 years after passage of 3 Strikes, CA's prison population ballooned to 160,000 souls.

3 strikes ends in my office beginning today.

16 411 2,539

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

Today we are confronting the lie that stripping entire communities of their liberties somehow made us safer–and we're doing it with science, research, and data.

7 74 872

George Gascón @GeorgeGascon · 7h

For decades those who profit off incarceration have used their enormous political influence–cloaked in the false veil of safety–to scare the public and our elected officials into backing racist policies that created more victims, destroyed budgets, and shattered our moral compass

5 145 1,035

They are pretty advanced as a product now, in terms of accessories, color options, etc (they have an off road conversion kit and stuff!). They are kind of expensive, tho not necessarily when compared to other wheel chairs, which cost anywhere from a couple hundred bucks for a shitty one, to like 4k for a high end electric one. An Omeo will cost you just under 2k.

Except it used to, and then big corporations coopted the aesthetic and watered down the message.

We're talking about a genre where a content creator (Steve Jackson Games) was raided by the Secret Service—an event which helped lead to the foundation of the Electronic Frontier Foundation, which represented SJG in their federal court case against the Secret Service.

We're talking about a genre that gave us The Matrix, a film whose plot has been confirmed by the writers to be a metaphor for transness.

Or in the Japanese cyberpunk scene‡, where one of the first cyberpunk filmmakers, Sogo Ishii, was a member of a punk rock band, and his film works were certainly an influence on Katsuhiro Otomo's Akira, a manga and later anime movie about a telekinetic biker gang that fights a corrupt government.

Or what of William Gibson's (who coined the definition "lowlife and high-tech") attempted film collaboration with Soviet punk musician Victor Tsoi—cut short by the latter's death? Or his attempt to collaborate with Sogo Ishii in a film that was to be shot in the Walled City of Kowloon, prior to that city's demolition? It's clear that the early cyberpunk authors thought cyberpunk had something to do with actual punk.

Because in fact, cyberpunk has everything to do with actual punk. The genre, in its original form, takes a punk-influenced analysis of today's society (particularly intellectual property, technological progress, and Capitalism as a whole), and pictures the near-future dystopia that might logically follow.

‡which, let's be honest, a lot of the aesthetic part of cyberpunk boils down to "modern Japanese cities at night"—William Gibson has even said something to the same effect himself

Brandon Bernard was sentenced to death when he was still a teenager.

He is currently scheduled to be killed on December 10, 2020

We need to save Brandon and get him off Death Row!

Brandon Bernard was sentenced to death for a crime committed in 1999, when he was only 18 years old. As an accomplice, he did not have a leading role in that crime, and he has demonstrated positive behavior throughout his 20 years of incarceration, even reaching out to others and counseling them not to follow in his path. When critical charging and sentencing decisions were made in his sentencing decisions were made in his case, both the Government and the jurors had an incomplete picture of Brandon and the offense. Today, five of the nine surviving jurors no longer believe that a death sentence is necessary for Brandon AND one of Brandon's former prosecutors who worked to uphold his sentence, now wants his life to be spared.

Living on Death Row is a profoundly limited and isolating existence. The physical constraints are obvious: Brandon lives alone in a 6x8 foot cell and typically spends 22 or 23 hours per day there. The cell contains a shower, toilet, and sink, in addition to Brandon's concrete bunk and the few personal items he is allowed to possess – mostly books, legal papers, and correspondence. His cell has a single-slit window covered with a film designed to keep him from seeing outside. The film in his cell has deteriorated in a few places, giving deteriorated in a few places, giving Brandon a fuzzy, narrow look at the outside world, but it's not like having a real view. From his cell, Brandon doesn't see the sun, any trees, or the snow in the winter. The exercise yard used by Death Row prisoners is open only to the sky above. When Brandon leaves his cell, he is handcuffed and in leg chains.

For those concerned about making sure Brandon is still punished and locked up, he would be. He would still be in prison, he would still be eating prison food and be locked in a small cell at night, at a time not decided by him. He would still be sleeping on a paper-thin mattress. He would still have guards watching his every move. His phone calls and correspondence still would be monitored. Leaving Death Row for regular prison confinement does not make you a free human, it just gives you some of your humanity back.

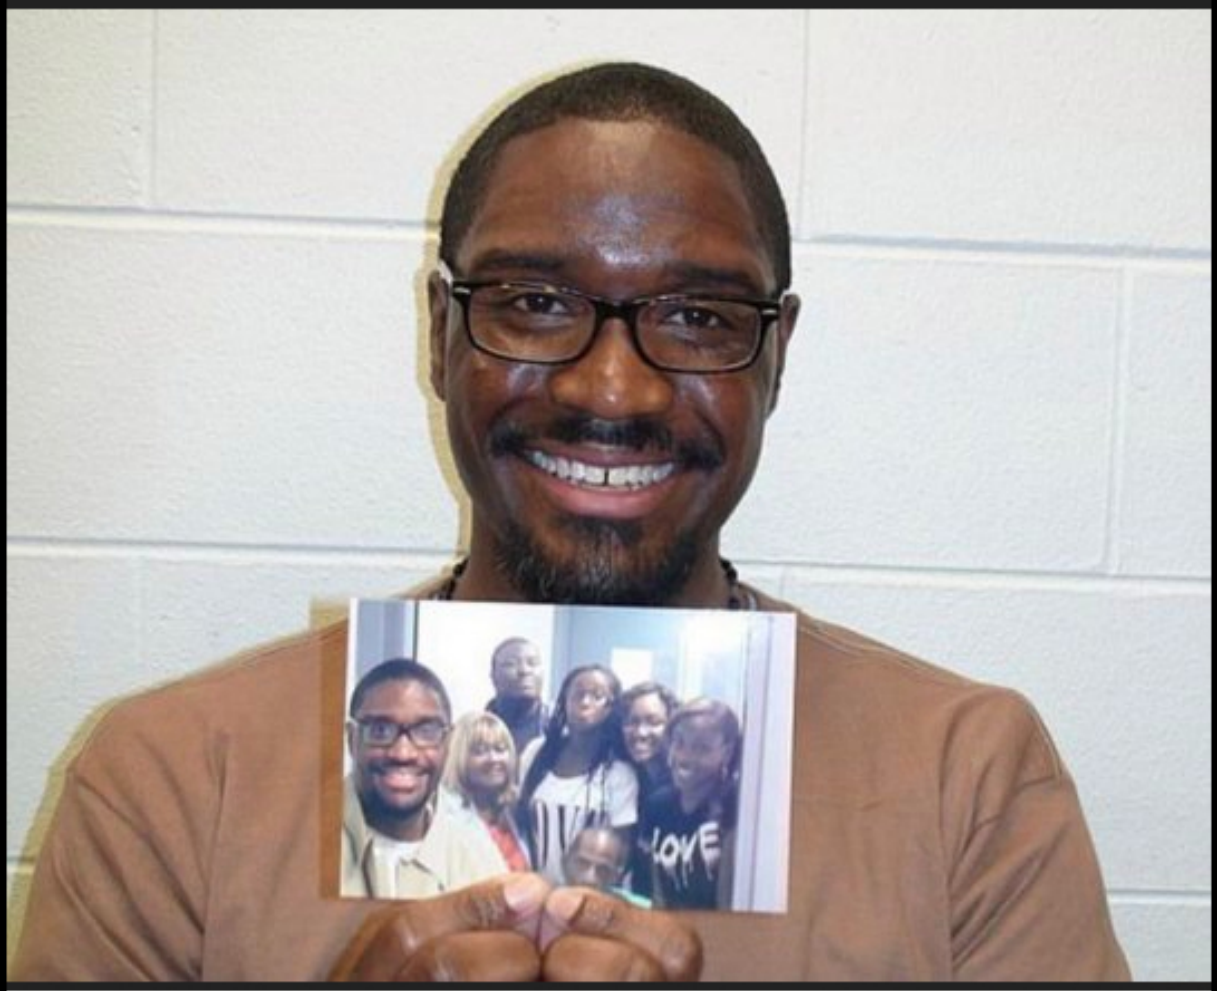
In five hours, Brandon Bernard will be executed. He has worked his whole adult life to atone for what he did and rehabilitate others and help stop young people from straying for the right path. Please, if you're from America, consider calling!

one-time-i-dreamt Follow

Rest in Peace, Brandon Bernard. You spent 21 years on death row

Rest in Peace, Brandon Bernard. You spent 21 years on death row atoning for your role in Todd and Stacie Bagley's murders, which is more than half of your life. You never got to hug your kids. You felt extreme remorse and guilt over the crime you committed at 18. Your last words were apologies to the victim's families. You did not ask to be released, or demanded to be forgiven or exonerated, you wanted to spend the rest of your life helping people not commit the same mistakes that you did as a young boy. A lot of people involved in your case, especially the jurors, changed their minds after learning the facts not presented to them at trial and hearing about how you changed your life, and said they would not choose the death penalty for you if they were put in the same position again. Anyone who met you was impacted by your growth. Everyone who met you couldn't stop talking about how reformed you were.



"If these are my last days, I pray that my words will live on forever...I hope that my death will bring a meaning other than destruction and it will ripple through generations positively."

Brandon Bernard

@SOYOUWANTTOTALKABOUT

ATTORNEY STATEMENT RE: EXECUTION OF BRANDON BERNARD

'Tonight: those of us who love Brandon Bernard — and we are many are full of righteous anger and deep sadness at the actions of the federal government in taking his life. Brandon's life mattered. To us, his legal team; to his two beautiful and talented daughters; to his mother, brother: and sister; and to the countless people around the country who came to know him and his story in recent weeks.

Brandon made one terrible mistake at age 18. But he did not kill anyone: and he never stopped feeling shame and profound remorse for his actions in the crime that took the lives of Todd and Stacie Bagley. And he spent the rest of his life sincerely trying to show: as he put it: that he "was not that person." Brandon showed us that and so much more, carrying himself with grace and generosity: and always treating everyone around him with kindness and respect. He worked to help other troubled kids avoid similar devastating mistakes, and he lived every day his commitment to serving both God and humanity.

Many things went wrong to put Brandon on death row, including egregious government misconduct in concealing evidence and misleading the jury, which the courts refilsed to remedy. Before Brandon's execution: five of the jurors who sentenced him to death said they no longer stood by that. They joined the lead appellate prosecutor on Brandon's case in urging President Trump to commute his death sentence to life without parole. Those pleas for clemency were joined by hundreds of thousands of supporters, including celebrities, faith leaders: and members of the United States Congress.

Brandon's execution is a stain on America's criminal justice system. But I pray that even in his death: Brandon will advance his commitment to helping others by moving us closer to a time when this country does not pointlessly and maliciously kill young Black men who pose no threat to anyone: when we hold prosecutors to the highest standards of integrity in every case, and when our leaders exercise their moral authority where it is needed.

We were proud to call Brandon our client and our friend, and we will miss him greatly."
Robert C. Owen, attorney for Brandon Bernard

December 10, 2020

Justin Amash

@justinamash

The federal government under Donald Trump has executed more individuals in recent months than had been executed in the preceding 60 years. The death penalty is inhumane and fraught with error. No government should have this power. It's past time to #AbolishTheDeathPenalty.

The Trump administration has 5 more people scheduled to be executed before the end of his administration. 4 of them are black men. The last time a lame duck President executed someone was 130 years ago.

Hope Todd and Stacie are resting in peace too. A lot of people are using their murders to justify their agendas right now. Their names should not be used for that, their memory should be respected. They were innocent in all of this.

How Donald Trump sleeps at night is beyond me.

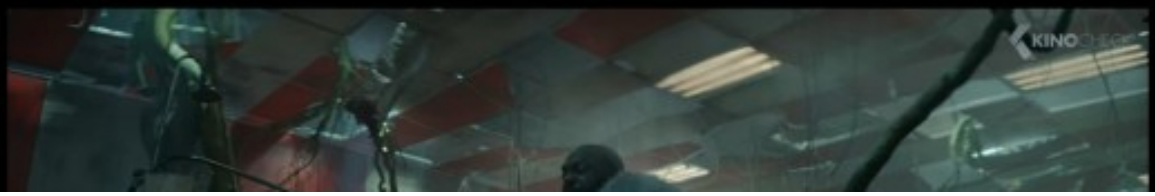
Observations from the Loki trailer:

- First off, there's a lot going on here that is impossible to decode 100% accurately, but so many cool mysteries abound.
- Loki's hair does several things during the trailer, and the fact that he appears in the desert with short curly hair in one scene but longer, straighter hair in another scene makes me think that the desert scene is NOT the first new scene of the series...unless tesseract travel causes hair to curl. But I guess he decides to change his hairstyle sometime around the "Glorious" scene because it's so different there.
- In fact, I bet most of these scenes are out of chronological order

- In fact, I bet most of these scenes are out of chronological order and I'm not taking anything for granted while watching this.
- Owen Wilson (Mr. Mobius) shows Loki a projection of himself in the "saviour" pose from Ragnarok, so perhaps this is Loki learning about what was SUPPOSED to happen to him and being none too pleased about it.
- There are various "post-apocalyptic" shots taken of ruined areas. It looks like Earth's moon exploded and caused this destruction, or at least was one of the things destroyed by whatever happened there.
- There's a woman sitting among the ruins as moon rocks pelt the Earth, but it's just as likely to be Lady Loki as the other character people think it is.
- Loki and what I'm guessing is a TVA assault team enter a Roxxcart, which I can only assume is Roxxon's version of Walmart. A lot of fighting happens there.
- Loki's "Vote for Loki" outfit is a comics Easter egg, I think, and not an indication that they'll be doing that storyline. Two characters seem to be wearing other famous Loki outfits during a fight scene, and one of them has a "hammer" that looks hand-made. Others wear weird armor cobbled together from housewares. There's also a throne with a big "L" over it. I think (?) this is all still inside the ruined Roxxcart. Man, this show is gonna be weird, isn't it?
- The kitschily-dressed stewardess looks unhappy as Loki walks away and gets ready to jump. Maybe because they know each other...or maybe because he's about to jump off a plane with no friggin parachute.
- There's a significant looking hooded figure wearing black fingerless gloves (!), and I'm reallllly hoping that's Richard E. Grant as King Loki.
- There's also a guy who looks like Bucky as Captain America for a second but honestly I have no idea what that's about.



So wtf...

Okay here's some disjointed Loki

observations

I am strictly approaching this from what we've seen of Loki in the MCU and I'm sure people MUCH MORE well versed in comics and such will have ACTUAL insight into these things but I hope you all won't mind me spamming up the timeline with thoughts:
First, Loki got a haircut in Space:

Below in the mirror, you can see Loki has the scepter back (?) This looks like similar styling to Tony's penthouse, but then this whole TVA/Series has a 60s aesthetic about it, so maybe not (someone delve into Avengers footage and chime in)

Below looks like Loki getting pissed off at being trapped and I.am.here.for.it. That's all.

This wasteland is clearly NYC based on Stark Tower and I would find it hilarious if this is somehow a timeline where Loki "won" in 2012

No commentary for below except it looks like Loki is being absolutely useless back there while these guys are going at it XD

Again not adding anything except between the posture and the short sleeves Loki looks like he's been called into the Principle's office for his crimes. Look at this petulant boy: ~~(hair looks great though)~~

THIS DOES INTEREST ME THOUGH...because this is Ragnarok Loki. 2012 Loki...has not "Your savior is here!!!"ed' So...is the TVA bragging that they know more about Loki than Loki does??

The thermian argument is a logical fallacy that occurs when a question or criticism concerning the political statements that can be gleaned from a game or other work of art are countered instead with an in-universe explanation for why the thing being criticized is actually valid.

fandomfishbish Follow

i cant read can someone explain this in a different way so it makes sense (if u don't mind)

rjalker Follow

@fandomfishbish it's like when female superheroes are drawn with almost zero clothing or armor, especially compared to male superheroes with the same powers, and people try to defend it by insisting that the in-universe explanation (like, that she's solar powered, so she needs sunlight on her skin to use her powers) makes it okay, even though it was a real human man who decided to draw her that way.

Someone does something gross, and people use the story to defend the gross person's real world actions and decisions.

Like, if I were to write a story about werewolves that says that any woman who gets bitten by a werewolf dies screaming in horrible agony, because women are weak and fragile and only men are Tough Enough™ to be werewolves, someone using the thermian argument would say that it's not misogynistic of me to write that, because "women are too weak to survive being bitten! That's just the way it is! It can't be helped!"

As though the story controls me, and not the other way around, as though I, a real life person, hadn't made the conscious decision to brutally murder all the women who get bitten by a werewolf.

Hope that helps!

One of the weirdest things as a Millennial is explaining DIY to younger generations. Like, before we were couture, punk/alternative/goth/gay fashion was cheap and lowkey crappy. Army surplus boots and Doc Martens hurt to break in. Black was a popular hair colour because you didn't have to bleach your hair first so you could do your own hair in the bathroom sink. You sewed patches onto a jean jacket because it was cheaper than buying a custom graphic t-shirt. If you wanted jeans ripped, you ripped them yourself. The point was fashion that was accessible to kids in Middle America.

But now the bar is so much higher and nobody gets Home Economics anymore. :/

house-of-crows Follow

tbh, this is something a lot of Alt kids need to learn, and need to learn NOW.

Shit was cheap because that's what we had access to. Cheap n dirty and now.

You picked up jeans second third or even fourth hand and yea they had tears in them. Don't know how to sew, that's fine, use safety pins! We used waxed floss to sew on our patches because we knew it was stronger than thread but ALSO we had access to a random needle left lying around and the floss in the cabinet.

It didn't used to be High Fashion. It was us, in our basements and our friend's rooms, doing things we saw other kids doing.... but ALSO, it was just... part of the lifestyle. We didn't know leather care like we do now, but we know it NOW because of Gay Leatherfolk for the most part. We used red and black hair dye, yes, because we didn't need to bleach it. We also used really dangerous methods to bleach our hair.... don't do that.

Learn from what's available to you now and be safer definitely, but don't forget the DIY roots of the movement. You don't need to be decked in Blackcraft and Dollskill to be cutting edge. You can paint your jacket yourself and use fabric modpodge to seal it, y'know? Then it's truly one of a kind.... not the same jacket you'll be seeing on a thousand other alt people at the next concert.

myfootyrthroat Follow

It's crazy to me now seeing people get their green hair or whatever at a salon for like $100+. I remember in high school someone would get a bottle of developer and everyone would get whatever color they wanted, and we'd all do our hair in someone's kitchen (whoever had the best sink sprayer, usually). Like, back then, if you wanted a COLOR you usually couldn't get it at a salon. You had to buy the colored dye at the record store.

gothiccharmschool Follow

Are you part of an alternative community? Queer? Goth? Metal? Punk? Any sort of not-particularly mainstream? LEARN TO DIY.

deliriumcrow Follow

When I was in school, we used Kool-Aid unsweetened packets to dye our hair. You can use it to dye wool yarn (an animal protein fiber) and it lasts forever, and hair is also an animal protein fiber, so it dyed us just as easily. If you wanted extra longevity, you mixed it with a little vinegar. Goth accessories didn't appear in stores before Hot Topic, so we made our own with second hand clothes and scads of black lace.

Make Do and Mend, the subcultures edition.

The author Robert Anton Wilson said (paraphrasing), "We have never seen a completely sane adult human." No one makes it out of this life alive. It's not their fault. Mercy, kindness, forgiving — these are what makes one human. They are other names for love. People break in the strangest of ways.

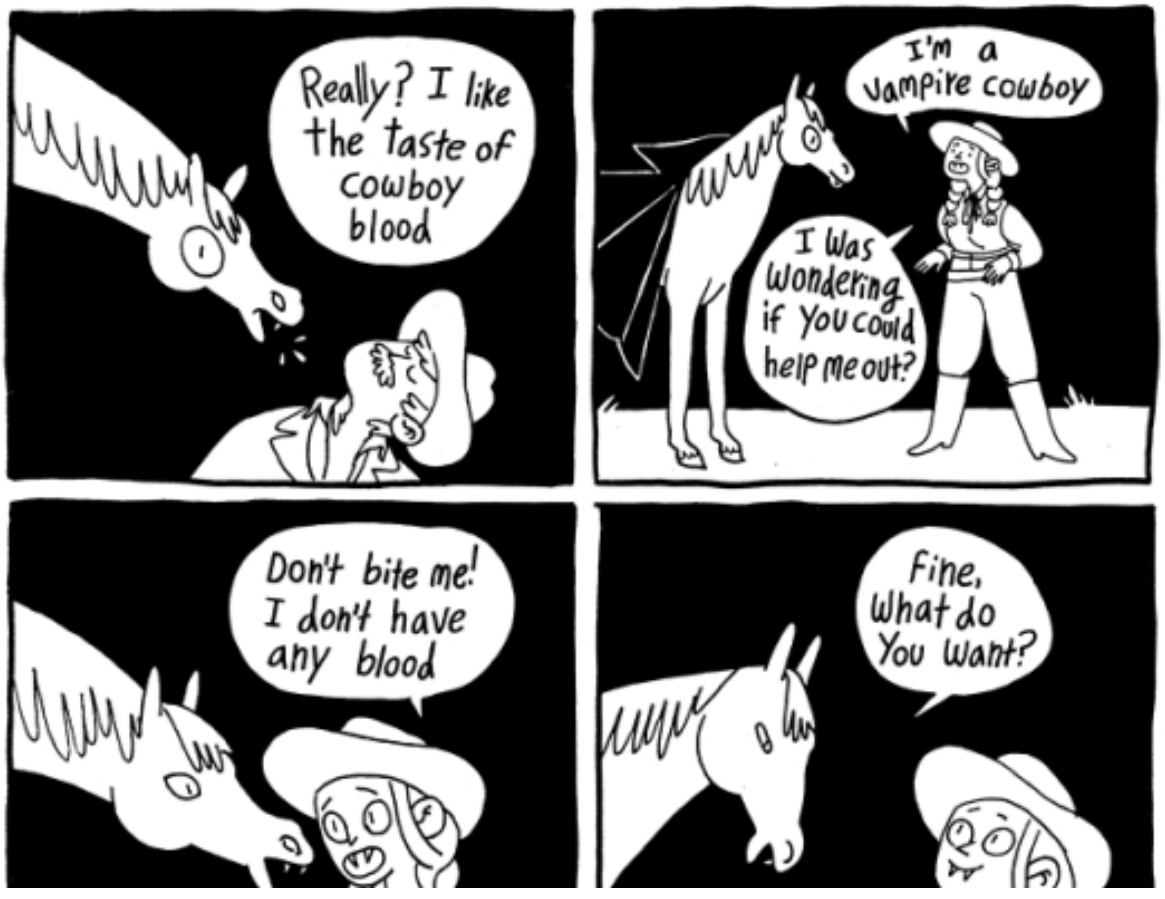
I drink the blood of cattle,
Sometimes the blood of horses
Sometimes I drink the blood of cowboys
But cowboy blood tastes too much like beans and salt pork



Really? I like the taste of cowboy blood
I'm a vampire cowboy
I was wondering if you could help me out?
Don't bite me! I don't have any blood Fine, What do You want?

My cattle were rustled. My horse was stolen too.
Can you help me round them back up?
I can pay well.
I have no use for human money
Okay, well, you can feed off some of my cattle?
I find that acceptable.
Wonderful! let's ride!

Do you hear that?
the cattle.
I smell their sweet grassy blood.
cow blood. bleh.

I see you have come to reclaim your cattle It's too bad. I was planning on letting you live.

And hello, Vampire horse, it's good to see you again.

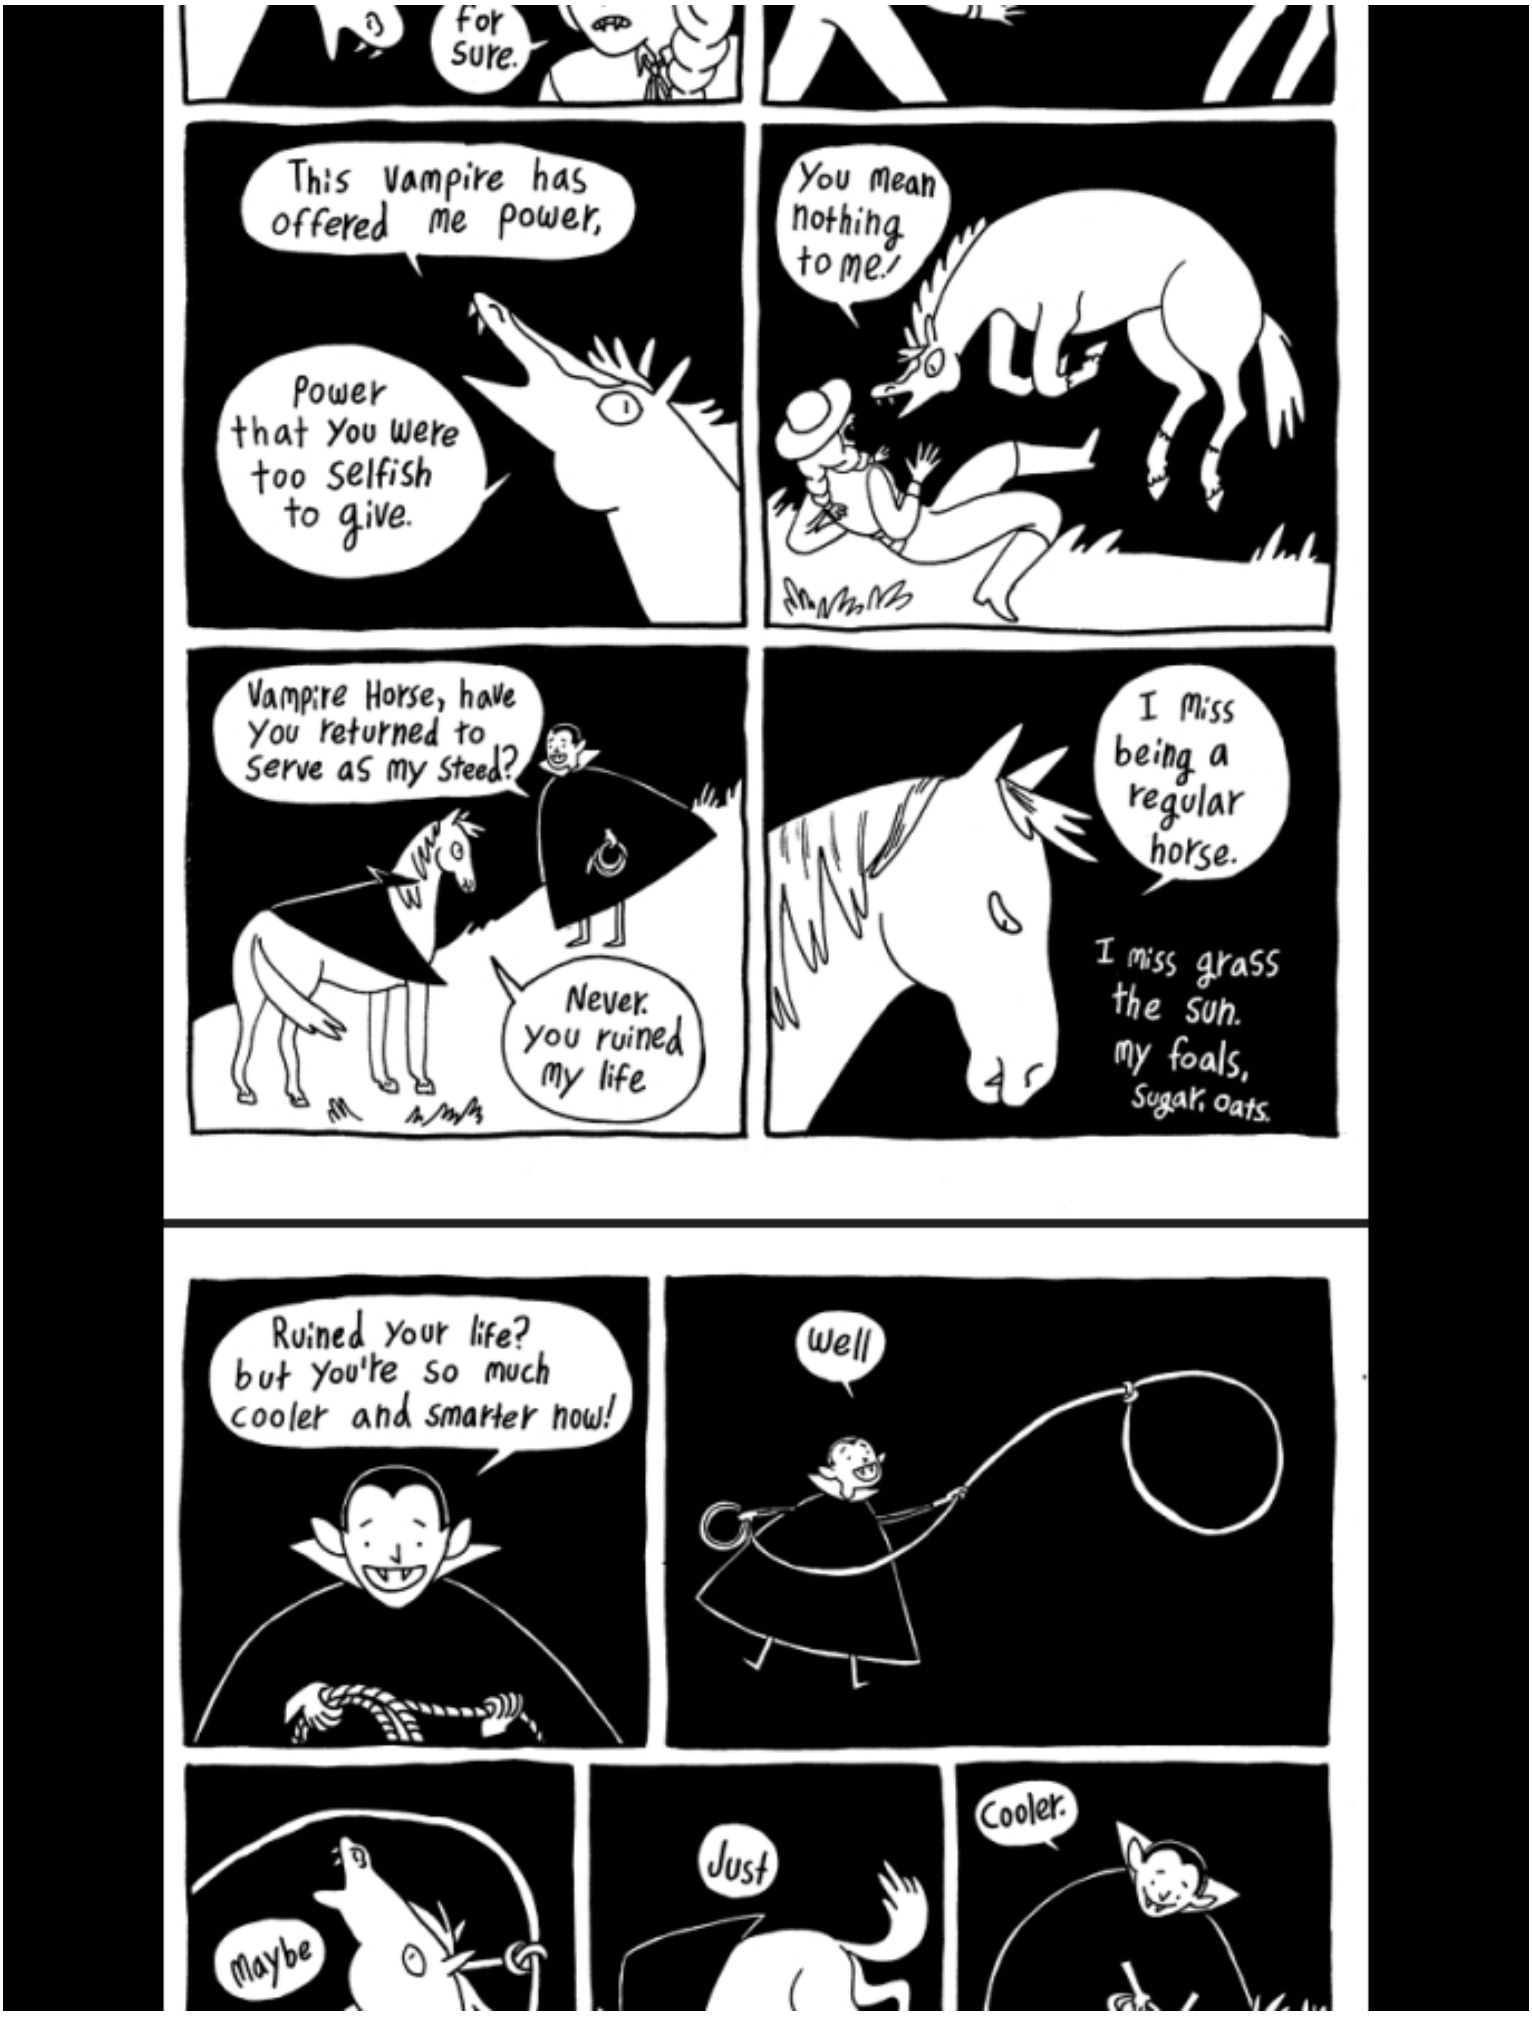
That's the vampire that turned me into a Vampire horse.

Looks like he turned my horse too.

And he's riding him

I'll take the vampire. You get your horse

Beans! how could you betray me like this?



for sure.
This vampire has offered me power,
Power that you were too selfish to give.
You mean nothing to me!
Vampire Horse, have you returned to serve as my steed?
Never. you ruined my life
I miss being a regular horse.
I miss grass the sun. my foals, sugar, oats.
Ruined your life? but you're so much cooler and smarter now!
Well
Maybe Just Cooler.

I made a mistake giving you the gift of immortality.
Obviously you are unworthy.
Unlike the other horse.
What-
Horse?
Other horse! No!
AAAAA

Love is a mistake.
I loved that horse.

I mean that's too bad. If you want, I can be your horse.
Really?

I mean, if you want, you saved my life!
You helped me get my cattle back.

And I could use a hand at the ranch. Would you like to be my partner?
A vampire rancher.

I am a VAMPIRE RANCHER
I wander the plains with five thousand head of cattle

What's better than a vampire? What's better than a horse. A Vampire Horse, of course. I made this comic a few months ago.

I'm glad I figured out what "toxic masculinity" actually is instead of what all these chuds want you to think it is. Toxic masculinity is NOT being masculine. Toxic masculinity is the idea that men have to fit in certain categories, and look, act, and behave specifically or else you aren't "a man." Toxic masculinity is forcing boys not to be emotional because they won't be "manly." It is NOT growing a beard and being a lumberjack unless you pretend that every man should be the same.

One of my favorite stunts ever executed in a movie is so simple yet incredibly groundbreaking and it's in The Wizard of Oz when Dorothy opens the door to reveal a full-color world.

The Wizard of Oz starts out in black & white — standard of the time and what people were used to.

GIF by cinefantastiquemitho

But then after Dorothy lands and opens the door, she reveals not only the magical land of Munchkinland but also the magic of technicolor in one single shot.

Since technicolor was not very widely available prior to the Wizard of Oz's release, for many people it would be the first time they were ever seeing a moving picture in color. What better way to pull it off than in a big reveal like that? Fantastic! I know by today's standards this doesn't seem like a lot for a movie, but this was a great trick given the technology they had. What a special way to bring some magic to audiences, especially in a time when things were really down in America during the Great Depression.

prismatic-bell

ALSO

This is the greatest special effect you never knew you were looking at.

The celluloid used as film at the time was thick and brittle. Splicing it was basically impossible. How to go from sepia Kansas to technicolor Oz? This was a problem that nearly sank that amazing reveal shot.

Until some crewmember said “why not just film it all in color and paint Kansas brown?”

That’s right. THAT WHOLE THING IS COLOR. ALL OF IT. Bobbi Koshay (Judy Garland’s body double) has been put in brown makeup to hide the pink of her skin. That dress isn’t blue and filmed in sepia, it’s an identical brown dress. The furniture? All painted brown. The walls and door were painted to match their color on the Kansas film rolls....a daunting task, because film at the time came out so incredibly dark that those lush Ruby Slippers were almost orange in real life, just to get that deep red color. (Early tests with actually-red shoes came out black rather than red!)

And it was done so well and so expertly that the only way to tell it’s even there is to get one of the 1970s or TNT prints where Kansas is black and white instead of sepia-tone (since the painted “sepia” will be out of place).

Today we could do this with a click of a button. Back then they had to invent a whole new set.

Drink your “respect the SFX crew” juice today!

I'm so tired of every show that takes place in the past (wild west, medieval, pirates etc) ALWAYS having so much sexual violence towards women like writers can cry "oh it's realism" all you want but it's very transparent how realism only applies when you want to hurt women on screen. If we're talking staying realistic, why doesn't everyone have brown teeth? Or bad skin? Or dying of dysentery? Just admit y'all want an excuse to brutalize women on screen lol

squidsticks Follow

This pisses me off so much. A lot of the time if you mention realism would also involve women having unshaved legs or pits, or bushy eyebrows, or syphilis, the answer is often "well that's gross, no one wants to read about/see that" and like.... If you think that women being ugly is grotesque, but brutal depictions of rape aren't, then I don't really know what to say to you other than stay the fuck away from me.

rave-lord-nito Follow

To add to this: The pirate captains had personal codes (rules) about what was allowed on the ship, and some of them were very clear on the subject of sexual violence

" IX. If at any time you meet with a prudent Woman, that Man that offers to meddle with her, without her Consent, shall suffer present Death. " -From the code of Captain John Phillips

" 9th: If any p[er]son or p[er]sons shall go on board of a Prize and meet with any Gentlewoman or Lady of Honour and should force them against their will to lie with them shall suffer death. " -From the code of the company of Thomas Anstis

Or in other words, sexual violence against women was recognised as a crime punishable by death on actual pirate ships, don't let anybody tell you it's necessary for "realism" when the pirates themselves recognised how absolutely despicable it was.

tonycervone @forsaken_child_ I've said this before, but Velma in Mystery Incorporated is not bi. She's gay. We always planned on Velma acting a little off and out of character while she was dating Shaggy because that relationship was wrong for her and she had unspoken difficulty with the why. There are hints about the why in that episode with the mermaid, and if you follow the entire Marcie arc it seems as clear as we could make it 10 years ago. I don't think Marcie and Velma had time to act on their feelings during the main timeline, but post reset, they are a couple. You can not like it, but this was our intention.

abcoconut Follow

Ok, but yeah. I want to work more than 15 hours a week. I genuinely love the challenge with what I do. 15 seems, oddly tiny? Where did this number come from?

@abcoconut then work more hours, you wouldn't be FORCED to work under 20 hours, the 15 hours is a guideline. No one should HAVE to work more to survive. Honestly no one should have to work at ALL just to make rent and food

This is a good response to that question, in case anyone wanted the q&a paired together. 15 would be the social average — some people might work more, some less, but that would be up to them. This is also presupposing a change in the way the economy effectively functions, in the sense that 15 hours would be the social average for necessary labor, and after that point you'd probably see tons of people participating in "unnecessary" labor out of interest. There's an idea in socialist theory that basically says once you reach a point far enough along after capitalism you'd just start seeing a blurring of the lines between what's defined as "work" (or as "a job") and what's defined as "a collective activity", especially with regard to the arts, science, etc.

At the very least, a transition towards (eco)socialism will require a vast shortening of the workweek and a reduction in overall advertising/consumption, whether that mean a 15-hour week or a 20-hour week. The main point is that people are overworked, we can meet everyone's needs feasibly with less hours anyway, and the over-emphasis on extraction and accumulation (which is in part fueled by a tediously long workweek) is having disastrous effects on the planet a tediously long workweek) is having disastrous effects on the planet. We can both accomodate the needs of the planet AND expand the political horizons for the great majority of the population, but it will require the fundamental defeat of capitalism and the establishment of a new ecological workers' democracy. It's a big project, but so worth it in the long run.

What could a person possibly do for 15 hours a week that would warrant enough pay to live off of? 40 hours a week is completely reasonable and if you were like the rest of us you'd be fighting to get more hours. Not all of us have parents to fallback on cause we don't wanna put in a full weeks work

The 15-hour week presupposes a change in the economy first. Obviously capitalism requires long hours for people to survive, but in terms of pure stats it's not necessary for society to be working that much. There's enough resources for everyone, and so much work is pointless bullshit that only exists to line the pockets of the rich. The ecosocialist project demands a new way of looking at and distributing work. Get rid of the bullshit jobs, divvy up the necessary jobs, and we'd free up people's time immensely to engage in pursuits they actually want to do to contribute to society.

Also, food and housing and such would be guaranteed in an ecosocialist society anyway, so it goes beyond simply reorganizing work. People have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and those will never be achieved for the great majority in a capitalist society.

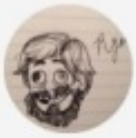
eco-socialism Follow



marbleflakes

If people are wondering where the numbers come from, think about all the redundant and pointless jobs that would be eliminated once capitalism is gone. The entire insurance industry would be gone. Large swathes of manufacturing making identical products with different labels, gone. Finance sector, gone. Wasteful R&D on competing products instead of just everyone working to make the single best product they can, that's gone too. Planned obsolescence? Gone.

marbleflakes

The more durable and functional you can make a product, the less you have to make it, the fewer hours we have to spend a week making the product, which would be passed down to the worker instead of up to the CEO. Instead of making sure that everyone has to buy a new washer and dryer to buy a new washer and dryer every 10 years, you make one that people almost never have to replace. Same with cars. Same with electronics. You wouldn't have to gather as many materials, or as much time remaking product.

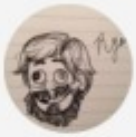
marbleflakes

Under a communist/ecosocialist/ really any left-wing economic structure, any improvements in a product or service that reduces the amount you need to make, or reduces the time in which it takes to manufacture, is more time you get to spend not working. Do you wanna work 30 hours making these things? Cool! That means someone who wants to devote their entire time to developing entertainment for you when you get home doesn't have to interrupt that work anymore. Win/Win.



These were really good additions so I wanted t add them onto the cumulative post

asbr808 Follow

the whole point of capitalism is to maximize both the demand and the supply for a product, in many cases creating new avenues of consumption and production that didn't exist prior. Huge amounts of resources and time are used up to synthesize unnecessary activities and products. Simplicity is the sharpest knife.

Apparently their yardstick for what constitutes a human rights violation changes depending on the color of the oppressor's skin. If that sounds racist, it's because it is.

Atheists and apostates simply don't show up on the "Matrix of Oppression," (not a joke, sarcasm or strawman) used to judge the rightness or wrongness of hating an entire group. But Islam does.

Under intersectionality, this configuration means that criticizing Xtianity is applauded, and ex-Xtian apostates are welcomed. But criticizing Islam, as a "marginalized" class is "racist" or "Islamophobic" or merely "culturally insensitive," and anything to do with disparaging it, no matter how well deserved, is hushed with a whataboutism and a useless platitude about the “religion of peace.” Especially apostates and everyone else who suffers under it.

The net result of this lunacy is that in order to sustain the illusion of Islam being a victimhood category, atrocities against women, gays and apostates are erased. In the name of tolerance and sensitivity.

Sad I have to write this out, but abuse and trauma have zero benefits to anyone’s life. You can learn anything the kind way. You can become anyone the kind way. There is no reason whatsoever to traumatize you. Everything can be done without abuse.

Agreed. And even if you learned skills as a result of your traumatic experiences—you had to, it was necessary to survive—you did not deserve to learn them like that.

Skill levels that go beyond what you would’ve acquired in a nonabusive environment do not justify what you went through. You were not so lost to “need” (read: deserve) abuse, instead of effective support, to achieve personal growth.

As a human being, you did not deserve that.

I still remember Howard [Ashman] coaching Sherri [Stoner, reference model for > Ariel] on that first day, in the scene where the witch magically draws Ariel's voice from her. Howard acted out for Sherri a way of physicalizing the loss of her voice. He showed her how her body would react as the witch's disembodied magical hands pulled the voice from her throat. He acted out the torso drawn forward as the hands tugged, followed by the head, and then a sharper movement as the voice is pulled out of her. It was dance-like and very visual, clear and dramatic. And I still see what Howard showed Sherri when I view the actual drawn scene in the final film, animated by Leon Joosen. – John Musker

Like, not to be That Fan, but Anakin's a former slave serving the government that flat-out refused to attempt to clean up his home world's slavery issue (or, yannow, free his mum) and lashing out like teens do and looking for simple solutions, and she's a politician in the hopelessly corrupt government who spends her time crusading against its corruption and can understand that Anakin was uneducated, justifiably mad, and venting.

Like, saying "I should MAKE them do something" about your mother having a bomb inside her to keep her enslaved is kinda understandable for a teenager. Or even an adult.

cydonian-mystery

Tbh the thing that moved me the most about RotS, not at the time it came out but as I've gotten older and rewatched it a few times, is that I honestly can't fault Anakin too much before he started, you know, actively engaging in evil acts like mass murdering kids. His fall may have been a dramatic plunge into 'for the evulz', but the getting there was not as blunderingly obvious as people think.

Between the super-corrupt bureaucratic government refusing to deal with slavery on Tatooine, the aloof and dogmatic Jedi whose response to "I got a vision of my wife dying and I need help" was "dump her and move on", and the manipulative surrogate father figure luring him to the Dark Side, Anakin reacted about as well as a young man his age would have.

That isn't apologizing for fascism; it's more commentary on how fascists twist emotionally vulnerable young men into their puppets, and is imminently relevant to today's world.

Black Lives Matter Activist Who Snatched Confederate Flag Killed In New Orleans

Rest in power, Muhiyidin Moye.

They killed him. His name was Muhiyidin Moye.

He was killed 1 year after this video, according to what I've gathered online. Someone tried to knock him off his bike and shot him even as he rode away. He made it to a hospital, but, he still died due to blood loss as he'd left a trail of blood in his path.

All activists who you can name/you see make an impact are viewed as a threat to those in power or those who regard themselves as having power over minority groups. The more of these names I learn, the more I wait in anticipation to hear if they are still here or if their lives have been taken too soon yet.

Here's a PBS article because I like to believe they're less biased than most.

Question as a Gentile Concerning Hanukkah
Hi! So, I recently got curious about the history of Hanukkah, and having discovered where its roots lie, I've decided I want to celebrate this year. I find Judah and the Jewish Peoples' overcoming of the Seleucids and the miraculous rededication of the Temple of Jerusalem inspiring with regards to the value of the free practice of religion, of which I strongly stand for, and want to partake in solidarity, even though I do not personally know any Jewish folk, and will remain a gentile.
Is there anything particularly offensive about doing so concerning cultural sensibilities? If not, what recommendations do you have for recognizing and partaking in celebration

It's not your inspiration porn.
Learn about it, yes, please do, but it's not yours to celebrate.

No reason to be so callous; the others were able to answer polite enough. To bastardize joy in another people being able to practice their faith as "inspiration porn" is crass, even if I was perhaps overeager to express it but had the sense to ask before doing anything in particular.
The alternatives are disdain and/or no asking about people's sensibilities.

Parents of reddit, what did you find in your kids room that you put back and never discussed with them?

I wasn't snooping, I was helping him organize all his collections of stuff when he was in high school. I came across an old metal cookie tin filled with paper scraps. He'd apparently torn off every "good job" and "nice work" comment he's ever gotten from his teachers, as well as all of the Happy Birthday, and Love yous from all his cards. I realized how important those tangible affirmations are to him, so I've made it a point over the last 15+ years to write things down in addition to telling him. He's got pretty severe anxiety, depression, and PTSD, and I'd like to think that if I'm not with him, one of those little pieces of paper might help him get through whatever he's dealing with.

I'm not surprised it came out well! Compared to other liquids you can use for yeasted bread, like beer or milk, Gatorade is remarkably non-complex. As others have pointed out, it's primarily water, sugar, and salt, with a bit of citric acid; you can actually make your own gatorade by adding a shot of vinegar, a teaspoon of salt, and a tablespoon of sugar to 20oz of water. The ancient Romans had a variant of this they called Posca.

I'm not a chemist or indeed a professional baker but I suspect that the reason OP had such success is that the sugar and salt are great for feeding the yeast and stabilizing/strengthening the dough, and in Gatorade they've been mixed in really well so they're super absorbable. And look at what a fun color it is!

Gonna talk about those MRNA vaccines real quick.

So, many of us (possibly not all, because other vaccines in the pipeline) are going to be getting either the Pfizer or Moderna vaccine.

What vaccine you end up getting is likely to depend on your age, health, and where you live. Pfizer's vaccine is harder to store and transport, so if you live in a big city you're more likely to get that one.

For what I'm going to say, though, it doesn't make a difference.

You're going to be getting two shots, a few weeks apart. For Moderna, it's 28 days (4 weeks). For Pfizer, it's 21 days (3 weeks). Yes, this sucks. No, this is not ideal for mass vaccination. You'll get a card that will remind you to come back for the second dose. The person administering the shot, most likely a pharmacist, will also ask for your cell phone number so they can text you. Because if you don't come back that first shot is a waste of time.

We don't know for sure if the single shot gives any protection at all, but the reasonable assumption is that it doesn't.

This means you need to get your ass back in there for that second shot. And while you are waiting for that shot, you are not protected.

This means you should continue to wear a mask, etc. In fact, if possible, you should be even more careful, because if you get sick and can't come in for that second shot? They'll most likely have to start over. The trial included longer periods between the two, so you might be fine, but there is a risk here.

And once you have had that second shot?

It's going to take two to four weeks to build antibodies, during which time you will have lower, but increasing, protection. They'll tell you what it is...that data hasn't been released yet, but will be.

So you should still continue to be careful for those weeks.

Finally!

We don't know if these vaccines provide what is called sterilizing immunity, meaning you can't be infected and can't pass it on.

They may only provide functional immunity, meaning you get infected but don't get sick. You could still transmit COVID-19 to others, although the risk is lower.

Which means?

Yeah, the masks have to stay on until the case numbers and other metrics are looking good.

Please don't be those people who get that first shot and go throw a wild party. Have a bit of patience.

Marriage betweeen a man and woman was built in a way that benefits men far more than women. This is well studied.

If you're a man marrying a woman, you need to be cognizant of this and make sure you overcompensate in order to make things as egalitarian as possible.

I emphasize overcompensating because there are aspects of relationships between men and women that far more often than not result in women doing more, because we live in a patriarchal and misogynistic society.

The answer is yes, she did. I'm married. Now go reflect on your inadequacies as a partner.

In practical terms this means:

- know who the family doctor is (as well as dentist, optometrist, etc.) and when everyone had their last appointment so you can schedule the next. This goes for pets as well
- know your kids shoe sizes. Seriously, I had a coworker complain that her husband got too-small boots for their kindergartener.
- do grocery shopping
- based off the above, be aware of everyone's allergies/intolerances/diets/personal tastes
- know how to cook and do your fair share
- know how to do laundry, dishes, etc.
- know when the bills are due and pay some of them
- take an active role in planning holidays, vacations, etc. and budgeting for them
- know your kids friends so you can arrange playdates
- know their babysitter so you can arrange childcare
- if your spouse does the cleaning most often, know when they

- if your spouse does the cleaning most often, know when they tend to clean and help out. Do they sweep every day? Do they mop once a week or once a month? Help with that
- know the location of everything in the house (cleaning supplies, kitchen utensils, tax forms, etc.) so that if your spouse is away, you can run the household solo without having to ask constantly where everything is
- take an active interest in your spouse's life and your kids lives

Mark my word, if and when these preachers get control of the [Republican] party, and they're sure trying to do so, it's going to be a terrible damn problem. Frankly, these people frighten me. Politics and governing demand compromise. But these Christians believe they are acting in the name of God, so they can't and won't compromise. I know, I've tried to deal with them.

bunjywunjy answered:

it’s not just you, sun bears just look incredibly bizarre when you stack them up against other bears!

pictured: bear

pictured: film extra from the first narnia movie in a hyperreallistic fursuit:

but as always, there are real valid reasons behind mother nature's stupid horseshit!

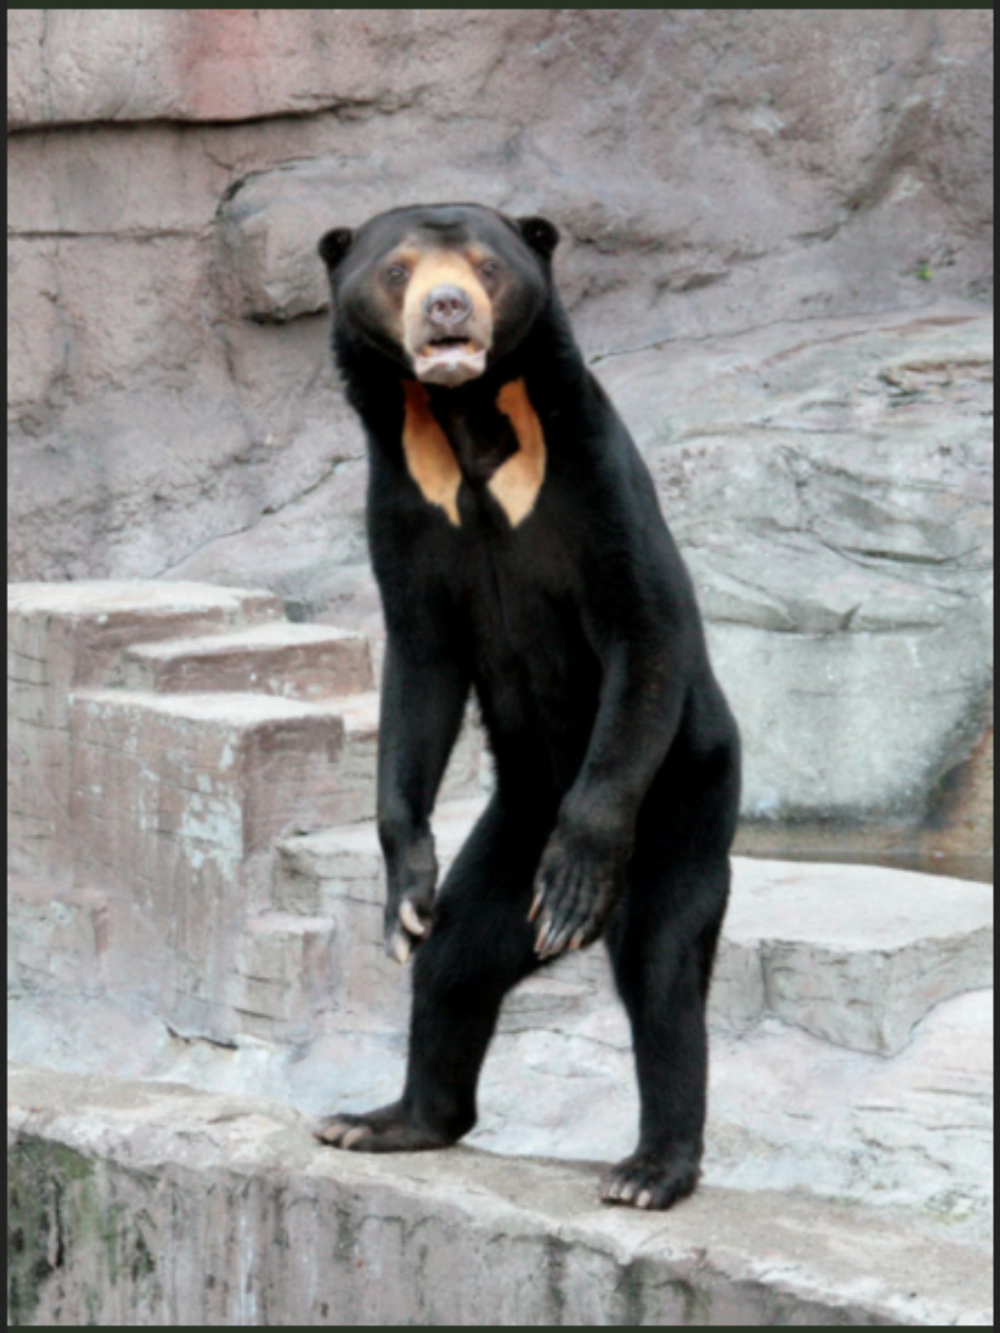
the sun bear has bizarrely humanlike limbs because, living in a hot tropical environment, they have no need for the enormous fat reserves of the temperate bears! this makes their bodies a LOT thinner and really screws up their proportions.



like really, REALLY screws up.

but sun bears do actually have longer front legs than other bears, along with larger claws, longer tongues, and cartoonishly mobile muppet faces.

and for good reason: sun bears are specialized predators of social insects!

the long legs and huge claws let the sun bear rip into beehives and termite mounds alike with wild abandon, while the long tongue and agile face assist the sun bear with getting all slurpy slurpy on the innocent hive insects and their delicious larva who were just going about their normal insect day when the sun bear rolled into town.

"aaaieeee! please, not the children!"

now insects aren't ALL a sun bear eats, by any means, but they DO form the bulk of the protein in the sun bear's diet, so they've got good reasons to look the way they do!

humans just tend to find the wonky proportions pretty off-putting, and it doesn't help that many sun bears also have light-colored eyes which humans find incredibly freaky.

NYEGH okay that is pretty awful.

anyway tldr sun bears look weird because the bear family tried to produce an anteater, and they didn't do a half-bad job at it!

lavenders-bi Follow

This is UNFAIR because obviously Merry and Pippin are conducting a Single-Subject research design which is commonly used in fields like psychology where the subject works as its own control. They aren't testing all elves willingness to eat twigs, they're testing Legolas' willingness to eat twigs.

By outing their testing in what is obviously the intervention stage and not allowing for a natural return to the reversal stage, Aragon has possibly ruined months of data.

In conclusion, Gimli is acting like a second year hard-science major who just took their first statistics course and both he and Aragorn should feel bad

filmibaby

Hell yeah! Tell em my social science sibling! Also it's clearly a qualitative - observational case study!

penny-anna Follow

I appreciate everyone defending them but Merry and Pippin DEFINITELY ruined their own results by laughing every time Legolas ate one of their 'gifts'

the-outspoken-introvert

Did they though? Technically their research question was just "will he eat it" not "does he eat it normally/unprompted". The fact that he choose to eat it because they had conditioned him to eat things they handed to him doesn't invalidate the premise, since he did still eat the Thing

penny-anna Follow

That's fair. I stand corrected, they were doing fine.

jumpingjacktrash Follow

possibly their experiment was "can we condition legolas to eat anything we hand him"

I want to share 2 stories. Both of these women have recently been potentially diagnosed with cancer.

For now, I'll call them "woman on the left" and "woman on the right".

I want to share the differences in health care.

Please finish the thread to see how I know them.

5:13 PM - 19 Apr 2019

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

Woman on the left is Dutch. She is a wife, mother, and grandmother.

Woman on the right is Indigenous. She is also a wife (widow), mother, and grandmother.

1 7 96

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

Woman on the left recently got a call saying she needs to go for further testing after results came back from a test she took a week ago.

Woman on the right has been waiting for further testing for months. Her scheduled MRI was just cancelled because the machine broke down.

1 8 103

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

Woman on the left has a specialist calling her within the next week for a biopsy.

Woman on the right has been waiting at home for months to be scheduled for the same procedure. It took a call from one of her sons threatening legal action to finally see some action.

1 8 112

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

Woman on the left got a call directly from her Dr.

Woman on the right didn't get any calls. It was not until legal action was threatened that her Dr. called her.

1 9 104

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

Both of these women deserve the same health care.

One gets faster results because of geography and race.

Woman on the left lives in the Edmonton area.

Woman on the right lives in the Arctic.

1 19 140

Lew Jobs @llewellynjobs · 20h

I truly love both of these women. I pray they both recover and come through and continue to live full lives.

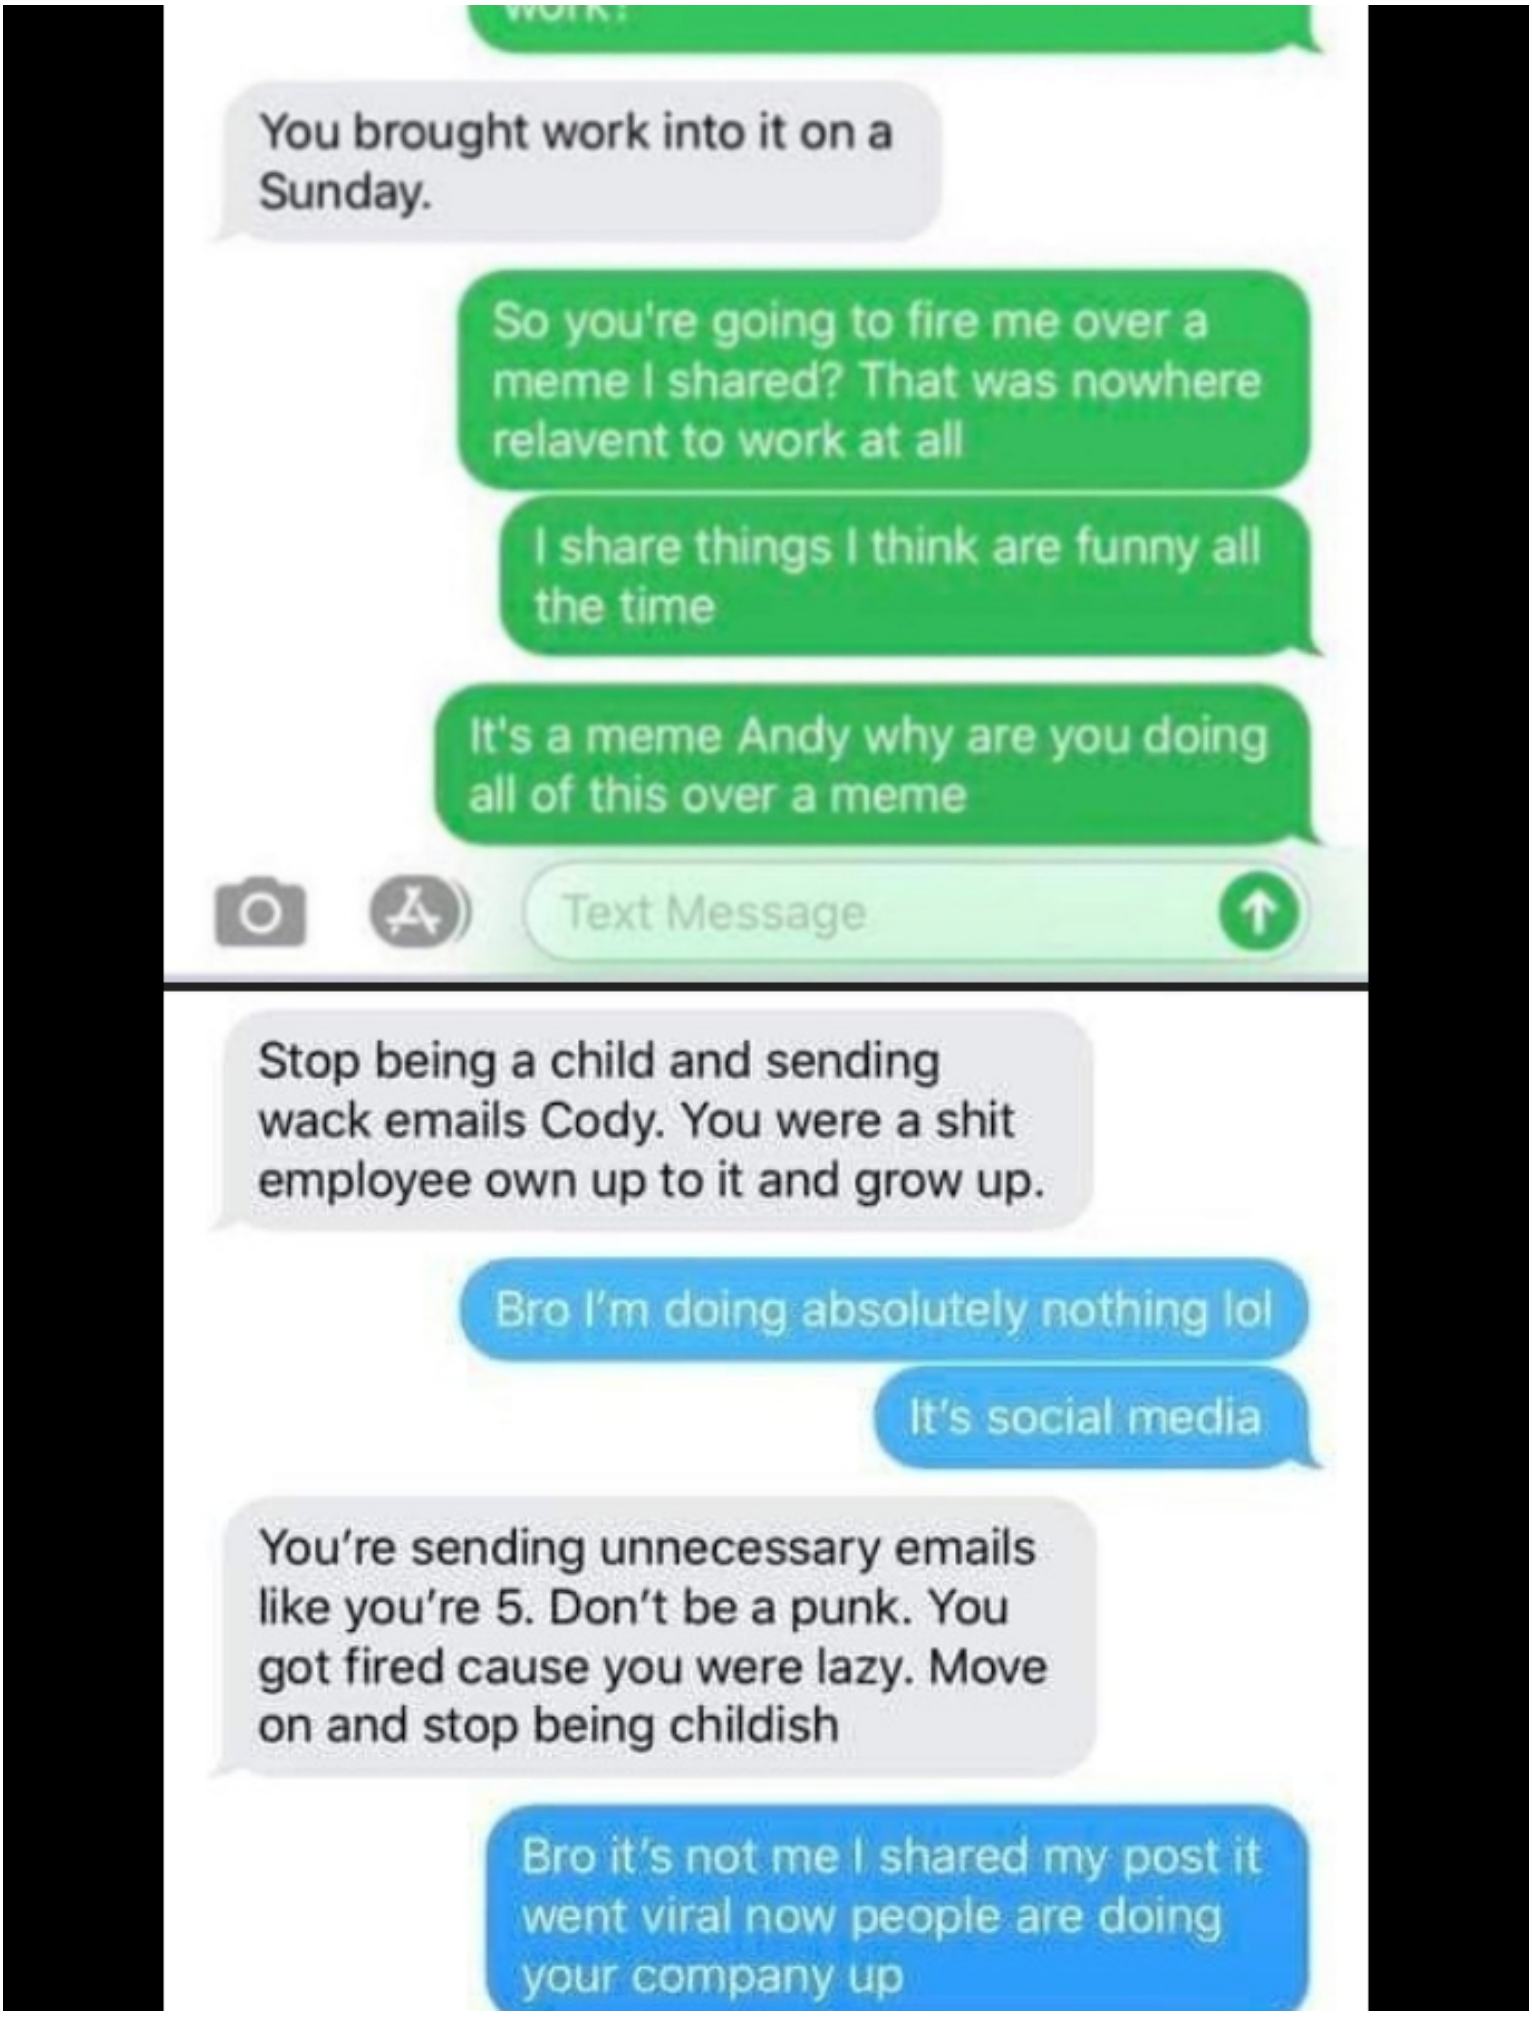
Good luck!

What are you talking about..?

Look on your Facebook page, do you think thing don't get around ?

Because I shared a funny meme..?
On a Sunday? When I'm not at work?



You brought work into it on a Sunday.
So you're going to fire me over a meme I shared? That was nowhere relavent to work at all
I share things I think are funny all the time
It's a meme Andy why are you doing all of this over a meme
Text Message
Stop being a child and sending wack emails Cody. You were a shit employee own up to it and grow up.
Bro I'm doing absolutely nothing lol
It's social media
You're sending unnecessary emails like you're 5. Don't be a punk. You got fired cause you were lazy. Move on and stop being childish
Bro it's not me I shared my post it went viral now people are doing your company up

Not my problem nothing I can do to stop them

You should come over and talk about this. Why don't you come over?

I'm not coming to your house to fight you I'm on probation I'm good lol

Who said anything about fighting. Come over

For what

To talk about what

Well if you want to be an adult you know where I am to come and talk otherwise. You handled this extremely childish.

I showed why I got fired on social media. To my friends. It went viral. I didn't do anything to provoke these people

Would you like me to unblock you and friend you again so you can see this

So then take the post down?

I didn't speak down on your company nor your dad all I did was post the messages and the mean

Meme

I mean don't you think that is kind of childish? Really.. your friends are sending emails about getting a job for pooping? Like

They're not my friends like I said it went viral these are people in Australia Scotland Poland

Pathetic.

If you say so

This right here shows your maturity level and why you not having a kid is for the best rn

And this now is why I'm not going to take the post down you basically just said my kid dying was the best thing that happened

Lol good luck in life Cody. I really hope it all works out.

@SassyCanuckChik

Dear white American dudes,

If I see you carrying an assault weapon in public, I am calling the cops. You don't need one to get coffee, go to the mall, walk your dog, etc.

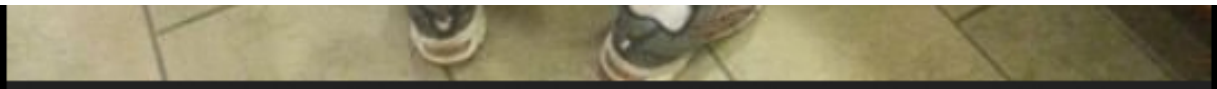
Your bullshit privilege doesn't mean I & my child should feel unsafe.

Hugs & kisses
Go fvck yourself.



Do businesses have the right to tell them they're not allowed to enter with guns? Because if I see that, I'm leaving the restaurant, club, store, whatever - without paying.

bilt2tumble Follow

I remember a time, seems like back when people had sense, when just seeing somebody get out of their car in the parking lot with this type of weapon, automatically generated MULTIPLE 911 calls.

Because nobody knew what this person might be up to.

The general assumption, back then, was; if somebodies carrying a gun like this, their going to USE it. Today? People have gotten used to the idea that these idiots might be making some kind of, '2nd Amdment Political Statement'. Now it seems people are reluctant to call, willing to wait until/if shooting starts. Far too little. WAY too late.

No one but the man carrying this gun KNOWS WHAT HIS INTENTIONS ARE. No one CAN KNOW why he's brought this Assault Rifle into a public space full of unwary and likely defenseless people. Until he either walks out of the shop w/o incident OR he unslings that gun and opens fire. We don't know. We CAN'T know. Anyone aware of OTHER PEOPLE beyond THEMSELVES/Other peoples INTERESTS (up to and including NOT getting shot)? Anyone with any sense of Civic Responsibility, Social Boundaries, or Public Safety? Would. Not. Do. This. So you can already assume their judgement is impaired. DO NOT WAIT to find out how deep that impairment extends. The people who do this sort of thing have no interest/concern for YOUR safety, so you're going to have to look after it yourself. Leave the establishment immediately- directly, don't wait for the Cheque or your order to arrive. JUST. LEAVE. AND-

Call even if you know other people have done/are doing the same.

Practice YOUR Civic Duty by notifying Authorities of a potentially EXTREMELY dangerous, public, situation, even if it overwhelms their call centers/dispatch. Don't let Dispatch blow you off with 'We already know/we know this guy/nothing we can do, it's his Right' You have a right to safety in a public spaces, You have NO IDEA what he intends, AND IT'S THEIR JOB TO ENFORCE/INSURE PUBLIC SAFETY. 'Git yo ass down here and MANAGE this situation!!!'

Worried about walking out on your check? Don't be. Again, you are CONCERNED FOR YOUR OWN SAFETY. In Open Carry States, business establishments can and do post signage stipulating that guns are NOT ALLOWED on premise. Those that do post this signage will understand why you left. Those that don't? After calling 911, contact the store or it's Franchise Office and ask WHY they don't. Inform them that they can wait for you to come back & settle up AFTER this public threat has left the area. OR they can just deal with the loss of revenue from people leaving without paying BECAUSE THEY ALLOWED A MAN WITH AN ASSAULT RIFLE TO FREELY ENTER THEIR STORE. Suggest that they might wanna take any revenue loss up with HIM.

If this became the Standard Response to this kind of irresponsible and, frankly, infantile behavior? How long do you think it will go on before SOMBODY, Retailers, Police, Legislatetors, do SOMETHING about it?

And it's WAY past time that something was.

rockn-roll-cat Follow

people will call the cops on a black kid washing his parents car in front of his own house (potentially putting that kid in a life threatening situation) and then turn around to question whether or not its okay to call the cops on a man with a fucking assault rifle walking in a store for a fucking pretzel (potentially saving multiple people from a life threatening situation) like why are our priorities so fucking skewed in america

In Norse mythology what kind of jotunn was Loki. He usually the god of fire so wouldn't he be a fire jotunn and usually people say Loki lived in jotunheim before he lived with the gods in Asgard. So wouldn't he have lived in muspelheim if he was a fire Jotunn or if he not a fire Jotunn then what is he and where dose fire come in. In some story's Loki was born when lighting strike in a Forest and made a wild fire a forest fire and Loki was born from the flame so wouldn't that make Loki just a natural just fire in a body. Simpler to Logy also I read some where that Loge was Loki's uncle brother to his father but I don't no if that's true. I personally like the story where Loki was born from fire it suits Loki to be half nature half destruction Beautiful yet deadly all at the same time.

He could teach her how to use daggers and he stronger and really fight for herself!

How Loki Can Return In Thor 4

While Loki on the Disney+ show is starting out in an alternate timeline to the main MCU, it's already been established he'll be moving through different periods in history, possibly creating lots of new offshoot timelines via the chaos he creates. He also appears to end up in time travel jail, so there's that too. With Avengers: Endgame already having old Captain America somehow cross back to the original timeline at the end, there's no real reason Loki couldn't get to the main timeline too, especially boosted by the power of the Tesseract.

What's more, the WandaVision show, set to launch prior to Loki's premiere, is set to explore the Multiverse fully for the first time, and there are also lots of hints that the MCU's Spider-Man 3 will in fact be a live-action Spider-Verse film. With an entire multiverse of possibilities at his finger tips, Loki might seem unlikely to end up back in the standard MCU timeline for Thor 4, but he'll no doubt be curious about why his timeline was meddled with in the first place, which might spur his arrival.

Happy Loki Day !

Sincerely: Hope

black and asian vikings 100% definitely existed (also, saami vikings)

you know how far you can get into eurasia and africa by sailing up rivers from the baltic and mediterranean seas? pretty fucking far, and that's what vikings liked to do to trade then, you know, people are people, so love happens, business happens, and so ppl get married and take spouses back home to the frozen hellscape that is scandinavia (upon which i'm guessing the horrorstruck new spouses went "WHAT THE FUCK??? FUCKING GIVE ME YOUR JACKET???????") and sometimes vikings bought thralls and brought them home as well, and i mean, when your indentured service is up after however many years and you're a free person again, maaaaaaaaaaaaybe it's a bit hard to get all the way home across the continent, so you make the best out of the situation and you probably get married and raise a gaggle kids

so yeah

viking kingdoms/communities were not uniformly pure white aryan fantasy paradises, so pls stop using my cultural history and ethnic background to excuse your racist discomfort with black ppl playing heimdall and valkyrie

shrewreadings Follow

Also we KNOW they got to Asia and Africa.

Why?

Because Asians, Africans, and Vikings TOLD US SO.

elodieunderglass Follow

I know a fantasy book that actually has a diverse Viking crew sailing to Africa.

The book features a chapter about a Viking voyage, which is set just after a Norman invasion of England. A pair of knights from England head off for retirement, evading capture from Moors and joining up with a Viking captain named Witta. Witta's crew includes:

- "Kitai", a Viking navigator from China. Kitai is described using stunningly racist terminology, in order to make it really clear that this person is Definitely An Asian Person From Asia.
- An African Grey parrot, which originates from the Congo.
- Warrior "Thorkild of Borkum," who was once a slave to a "King in the East"
- References to "Hlaf the Woman" who wrote the manual, or Ship-book, that they use to navigate. We are told that she "robbed Egypt."

Witta's father traded on the African coast: "Witta told us that his father Guthrum had once in his life rowed along the shores of Africa to a land where naked men sold gold for iron and beads."

Witta decides to repeat this journey. They put in somewhere near equatorial Africa and the locals hire them to kill some gorillas for equatorial Africa and the locals hire them to kill some gorillas for them (?!) rewarding them with gold. The encounter is successful, and the crew splits up in England, with the knights bringing their share of the gold back to Sussex and the main plot of the book, and Witta going back to Stavanger.

The book also has scenes set on Hadrian's wall in Scotland, somewhere around the year 400, in which the Roman soldiers battle the "Winged Hats" from Scandinavia. The Romans are explicitly described as a multiracial bunch, with men from all over the Roman empire, naturally including soldiers from Africa and Asia. I think a lot of people forget about the interactions between the native Celtic peoples of Britain, the Roman empire, and the Scandinavians.

The book was written by a Nobel Laureate 110 years ago. It is the seminal fantasy novel Puck of Pook's Hill, by Rudyard Kipling, and it was published in 1906.

It is a problematic text, but it serves to demonstrate that "racist discomfort" is an artifact of more recent colonial history - previously, diversity in fiction was an exciting demonstration of the Rich and Varied Heritage of the Glorious British Empire. Because Kipling was, of course, the definitive Great White Colonialist.

Now, if an imperialist colonial propagandist writing 110 years ago decided he wanted to tell a fantasy story about how African gold brought to England by Vikings was responsible for the signing of the Magna Carta, and he did this by having his Vikings sail to Africa with a Chinese navigator, and his intention in doing so was to show off the might and diversity of the British Empire and how its Ideals of Justice were thus knitted together "as natural as an oak growing," then I think modern fantasy fans can probably take a seat and listen to their own great-granddaddy.

petermorwood Follow

Not mentioned, but the protagonist of the "Puck of Pook's Hill" story "The Treasure and the Law" is a Jew, and it's his action of putting the African gold beyond reach in the sea that forces King John to agree to Magna Carta.

Pauline Parker And Juliet Hulme: A Fatal Friendship

The murder

Pauline Parker, born in May 1938, found a wonderful friendship in her classmate Juliet Hulme, born in October 1938 during their early teenage years. They both attended Christchurch Girls' High School in Christchurch, New Zealand, and became close friends after bonding over suffering from illnesses as children such as tuberculosis. They found comfort and sympathy in each other, and both of the girls' parents thought that their daughters were almost obsessed with one another. Pauline and Juliet spent their time together fantasizing and daydreaming about their fantasy land called The Fourth World. The Fourth World could be likened to heaven, and both of the girls thought that they could enter The Fourth World for a few moments after having feelings of spiritual enlightenment.

In 1954, their world came crashing down when Juliet's parents divorced. This resulted in a decision to send Juliet to South Africa to live with a relative, which would of course lead to the girls being separated. Devastated, the girls decided that Pauline should come with Juliet to avoid separation. However, there was one problem; the girls were quite certain Juliet's parents would allow Pauline to move to South Africa, but they were not as sure about Pauline's mother. The only solution the girls could come up with was murdering Pauline's mother.

Pauline's mother, named Honorah Parker, decided to take a walk with her daughter and Juliet on 22 June 1954. They first ate at a nearby tea kiosk and then walked through Victoria Park. When the three of them were out of sight, Pauline and Juliet bludgeoned Honorah Parker to death with a brick inside of a stocking. They had to beat her around twenty times before Honorah died. They dumped the murder weapon nearby and ran back to the tea kiosk, and told the owners that Honorah had fallen and hit her head. However, the police soon found the murder weapon, and the teenagers were soon arrested.

Trial and aftermath

The trial garnered massive media attraction. Rumors about Pauline and Juliet having a sexual relationship started to spread (Juliet would later deny this), and many believed that they were insane. Both of the girls were sentenced to five years in prison and later rejoined society. Both of them changed their names; Pauline Parker changed her name to Hilary Nathan, and Juliet Hulme became Anne Perry. Both of the girls became religious after serving their prison sentence; Pauline became a Roman Catholic and Juliet a Mormon. Pauline has remained quite anonymous through the years and has never spoken to the press about the murder. However, a statement from Pauline was released through her sister in 1995 where Pauline expressed remorse for the murder. Juliet, on the other hand, became a quite successful historical detective novelist, has published more than 50 novels and has sold over 20 million books.

Pauline Parker and Juliet Hulme were never officially diagnosed with a mental disorder, but it was speculated at their trial that they suffered from paranoia, attachment anxiety, and narcissism. The defense team argued that the girls suffered from folie à deux, which is also known as shared psychosis. This means that one of two people is suffering from an actual psychosis, and this triggers the other person to also exhibit symptoms of psychosis.

people love fat women a lot more when they're cute minimalist line art than they do when fat women exist in the real world and dare to take up space or even exist in their line of sight skinny or straight-sized women will use fat women in their cartoony art as a way to embrace body positivity but other than painting us on vases or making planters shaped like our headless bodies, what are you actually doing to support and love fat women?

you're out here getting the venus of willendorf tattooed on your arm but are you treating actual women who look like that in real life with love and respect?

because fat women exist outside of cute nude drawings and plus size insta models. fat women dressed in "unflattering" clothes exist, fat women in "ugly" clothes exist, old fat women, tired fat women... are they also symbols of your feminist movement?

or are our bodies only valuable as an aesthetic?

At my last job, we had a sign on the back door that said "you must walk trash all the way to the

dumpster; DO NOT TRAIN THE RACCOONS!!!"

The story behind that is the facility I worked at does dog daycare and training, and Darcy the Human (not to be confused with Darcy the Poodle) didn't like having to walk all the way across the parking lot at the end of the night to take out the trash, and trained about three raccoons to drag the bags to the dumpster because he couldn't be bothered to walk 50ft to it. He got away with it for about a year, and even named them. The manager only found out when she opened the back door to throw out some boxes and saw a bunch of raccoons immediately run up and cart them off.

i feel like this is selling her a bit short tbh. It's not like she was a random woman who decided to tape 'whatever' was on television. She was a civil rights activist and archivist, who was extremely concerned about preserving history. She believed that, by taping television, she would be preserving history EXACTLY as it was perceived at the time; she didn't want the detail in the news to disappear with time. And she was RIGHT.

Like I said, she didn't just tape 'whatever' was on television. It was extremely targeted towards news stations. There were 8 VCRs running at all times in her home. Her life—-and her family's lives—-were centered around 6 hour blocks, since that was the amount of time that a tape would record for. Her collections were also extremely organized.

From archive.org (Internet Archive) - The Marion Stokes Papers contain documents related to the life and activism of Marion Stokes (1929-2012), civil rights activist, feminist, and news archivist. Stokes' social activist career began in the 1950s, and encompassed many areas of left politics during a particularly transformative time in America. Her groundbreaking television show (co-produced with her husband John S Stokes Jr), Input, addressed many pressing issues, and much of it remains relevant today. Additionally, Stokes amassed a huge archive of videotaped television news, which is slowly being made available through the work of the Internet Archive.

How. Dare. He pay that much attention? How. Dare. He.

Where does he find the audacity to know that that muscle is there. Who gave him the right to look at the human form so intensely.

I respect it so much, I admire it.

My argument ended with me crumpled up on the sofa with my head in my hands exclaiming I'll never be a Master.

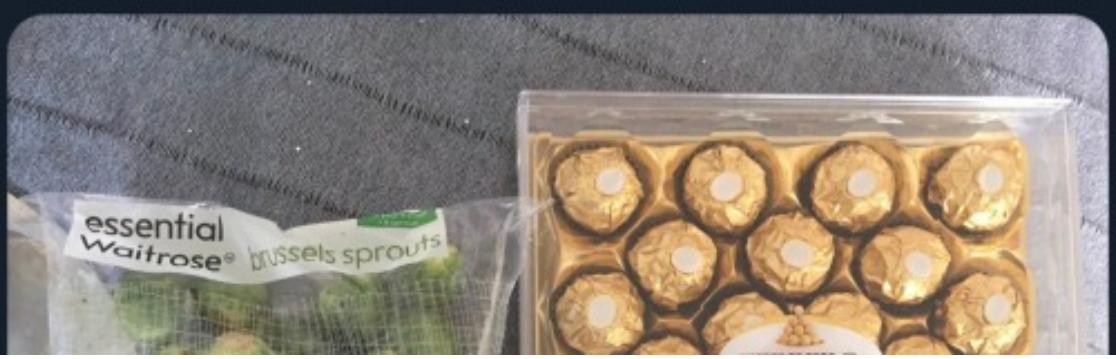
Judy Brown
@mcjude

I've done something ingenious to wind up my Dad (which is basically my favourite holiday pastime). It begins like this:



Judy Brown
@mcjude

Some of you out there may recall that in 2016 I played an excellent Christmas prank on my long-suffering Dad. It worked a treat.

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

Replying to @mcjude

Last year I decided to play the long game & didn't tamper with the confectionary: spooked by the year before, he would not touch a single Ferrero Rocher (which was great because he usually inhales them at 750mph) so there were Ferreros aplenty for the rest of us. I bided my time.

1 179 2,416

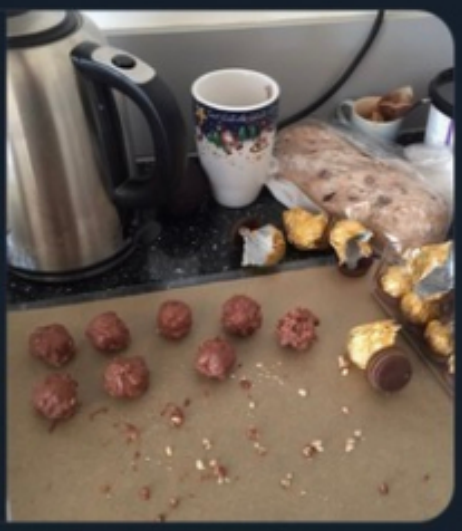
Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

And so, yesterday, home for Christmas and with the devil at my elbow, I embarked on my most audacious sprout prank yet.

8 306 2,256

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

While he was out I dipped the sprouts in chocolate, rolled them in chopped hazelnuts, and did all I could to replicate the iconic Ferrerro.



19 491 3,431

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

I re-wrapped and (this is crucial) re-sealed the box with its original tape and a tiny dab of glue. Then secreted it amongst a bag of tasty gifts from my Aunt and retired to watch from afar

7 191 2,586

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

Last night he viewed them with suspicion when they came out the bag... but I was out all day, how could I have tampered with them? He obtained and they sat in with them? He abstained and they sat in the kitchen all night.

2 111 1,937

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

This bright Christmas morning we were gathered round the tree, drinking tea and opening presents. Dad eyed the box. He quite likes a post-brekkie Ferrero. He approached. I hovered in the kitchen, careful not to spook him.

3 111 2,283

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

And Lo! He opened. He EXAMINED. He unwrapped. He examined FURTHER. Fears allayed, he popped the whole thing in his mouth. His face played a symphony of emotions: satisfaction, triumph, smugness, consternation, confusion, realisation, horror, disgust.

20 328 5,311

Judy Brown @mcjude · 7h

I am still chuckling. I will all day long. I know his retribution will be swift and terrible, but no Christmas gift could be greater than this: seeing my Dad, despite his efforts to avoid it, unwittingly eat a raw sprout. Merry Christmas, one and all.

responsible haunted doll ownership means aknowledging your doll's need for interaction and play time! make sure to give her plenty of stuff to look at with her rolling eyes and shatter-proof things to knock over.

remember that knocking picture frames off walls, inverting crosses, and leaving long and disturbing claw marks in your wallpaper is natural haunted doll behaviour and should be managed in a way which is healthy for both you and your doll!

Like imagine if I became secular but I still kept celebrating Rosh Hashanah for cultural reasons. Like in this scenario I don't go to synagogue or do rituals but instead just host a big meal for my friends and family and serve round challah and apples-and-honey and brisket and apple cake. And then two days later I go into work and ask my Christian coworker how their Rosh Hashanah was and when they're like "Oh I actually don't celebrate Rosh Hashanah, I'm not Jewish!" I act all offended and go "But why not? It's secular!!"

Like hello????

starlightomatic Follow

For Purim, because I'm secular, I don't hear the megillah read but instead just dress up in costumes, get drunk, and make Hamentashen for snack packages I give to all my friends. The next day at work I accost the same coworker and when they bewilderingly again respond with "Oh I actually don't celebrate Purim, I'm not Jewish!" I helpfully inform them that actually most of Purim's traditions probably originate not in Judaism but in an ancient Babylonian festival celebrating the gods Marduk and Ishtar! So, it's not really Jewish! Shockingly, they (American, Christian) don't find this any more relatable!

starlightomatic Follow

My poor, beleaguered coworker goes online to complain about how I just don't get it. He makes a post on tumblr and receives 300 notes from Jewish neo-Babylonian-pagans talking about how they understand because people keep claiming that Purim is a Jewish holiday. It does not help, and he feels that perhaps they have missed the point.
